7:30 Evangelistic Service. Subject "Is the Church a Back Number." This is the second sermon of "Sermons with a Punch." Hill Crest Male Quartet, composed of Mr. Wilson, Mr. Tullar, Mr. Knox and Mr. Evans, will sing. We also expect to have a trombone solo. The choir will also render special music.

Wednesday 7:30. Mid-week Service. Subject, "The Model Personal Worker—Philip." This meeting is steadily growing.

"Hush! and don't you speak too loud,
And you'll hear the witches howl.
Black cats, goblins, bats and ghosts
Wait for you at our gate posts,
At Hill Crest Baptist Church you'll find
When the bells at seven-thirty chime.
If you miss it, you'll be sorry,
Sure to have ten years of worry."

If you receive the above invitation be sure and come tonight (Thursday) at 7:30. A great time is planned.

Hill Crest Chatauqua. Under the auspices of the Men's Class. Watch for grand opening Nov. 10th. Great lecture by Dr. L. S. Colburn on "The Bright and the Dark Side of Married Life." Next week's Record will tell all about it.

ST. PAUL UNITED EVANGELICAL CHURCH

Morning worship at 10:30 A. M. Subject of sermon, "Giving Christ First Place."

Intermediate Endeavor at 6:30 P. M. Subject, "Standing for God and Right." (Consecration meeting.)

Preaching at 7:30. Subject of sermon, "The Fool and his Home." The evening service will be Evangelistic. Special effort is being put forth to make these services of vital interest to the people who come to worship. Why sit at home of a Sunday evening indifferent to the Kingdom of God while people are perishing without Christ?

HIGHLAND AVE. FRIENDS CHURCH

There will be regular preaching services at 10:30 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. Sabbath school will meet at 9:15 A. M Christian Endeavor at 6:30 P. M. Come and let us worship Him together.

HILLTOP CHURCH OF CHRIST

Communion 10:30 A. M. Sermon, "Should Christians Tithe?" P. M. sermon, "Fleeing From God." Time of evening service changed to 7:00.

ST. JOHN'S EV. LUTHERAN

Services at 10:30 and 7 o'clock. Morning topic, "Redeeming the Time, for the Days are Evil." Evening topic, "Why Should We Pray and How Should We Pray?"

The men of the congregation are to meet with Mr. Carl Staehli, N. Burgess Ave. on Wednesday evening, Nov. 5.

HOGE MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

If you are not attending a church school we give you a hearty welcome. This Sunday the young men of Mr. T. A. Jones class will present some "stunt" or new feature to the Bible school.

10:30 A. M. Morning worship and address by the Rev. C. F. Wiseman, superintendent Canton District of the Anti-Saloon League. Special children's sermon by the pastor. Subject: "Only a Boy."

6:30 P. M. Alberta Jones. The subject,—"Standing For God and Right." (Consecration meeting). All young people invited.

7:30 P. M. Happy Hour Service. Sermon by the pastor: "The Manly Determination." Opportunity is frequently given for taking the Christian step. All are cordially welcomed at all our services. The chorus choir leads the singing.

Under the direction of the Superintendent, Mr. H. G. Deems, the Bible school of the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church is making very material progress. The officers and teachers are meeting at a dinner next Wednesday night for the purpose of getting ready to introduce graded lessons in every department of the church's school. Classes are being organized under very competent teachers. There will be a special speaker. The school has started a Workers Library of the most useful and up-to date books on Religious Education. Black boards are much in evidence and the interest in the Bible lessons is steadily increasing. If your children are not in any Bible school and you want them under competent teachers and under good influences, send them out next Sunday morning at 9:15 A. M.

GLENWOOD METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

10:30 a. m. Morning worship. At this service Mr. S. A. Propst, of Dayton, Ohio, will review the present temperance issue. There will be special music by the quartet.

6 p. m. Epworth League. Topic, "Our Relation Toward Others, Toward Our Neighbors and Friends."

7:00 p. m. Evening worship with sermon by the pastor. Subject, "Who is God that We Should Take Him into Account?" This will be the first of a series of Sunday evening topics for the month of November. The general subject will be, "Practical Questions Growing Out of a Man's Relation to God." The topics for the following Sundays will be: "How Far Can a Man Know God?" "Can a Man Get Away From God?" "Can a Man Walk With God?" "How Can a Man Serve God?" These sermons will deal with fundamental problems of religion and will be particularly helpful to persons seeking rest of faith.

There will be special musical numbers at each service by a splendid quartet. The growing attendance at these services shows the public appreciation of these popular evening services. Please note the change in time for the evening services.

THE HILLTOP EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH

10:30 A. M. theme: "The Everlasting Gospel."

7:00 P. M. Reformation Service. Come and bear these stirring messages. They will help you.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST CHURCH

The Rev. L. S. Colborn, D. D., will preach morning and night. He will also administer the Lord's Supper at the close of morning sermon. Hear him for he is worth while.

Dr. Robbins will be in Williamsport, Pa., for two weeks preaching once and twice a day in Evangelistic services. Last week he preached the sermon at the annual meeting of the Ohio Baptist convention.

The First Division of Glenwood Aid Society will be entertained by Mrs. Allen at the home of her mother, 90 N. Warren Ave., Tuesday, Nov. 4th. Mrs. Ferguson, Mrs. Hughes, Mrs. Ong, Mrs. Matheny, assisting hostesses.

The Missionary society of the Hilltop Church of Christ will meet at the home of Mrs. Orr, 108 N. Burgess Ave., Friday, Nov. 7, at 2:30 p. m. Every member of the society and every member of the church is urged to attend.

There will be a L. U. B. A. rally at First M. E. church, Thursday evening, November 6th, at 8:00 o'clock. Glenwood young people please note the change in nights from the 7th to the 6th. Bring a good crowd as there is a fine time planned.

The S. P. I. class has been given the hour from 7 to 8 on Wednesday evening for gym. On Friday evening from 6 to 7 is the basketball hour. Basketball starts Nov. 7th, but gym began Oct. 29th.

The Dorcas Class of the St. Paul's Evangelical Church will meet November 5th, at the home of Mrs. Carlile, 64 N. Harris Ave. All members please come as we elect a class of officers.

The Dorcas Society of Highland Ave. Friends Church will meet at the Friends Rescue Home, Hague Ave., Thursday, Nov. 6, for their regular monthly business meeting, and to sew for the home. All ladies of the Church please remember this date, changed for the convenience of the Home.

Where are you going Sunday evening at 6:30? If you are between the ages of 13 and 17 years and not attending young peoples meeting, come to the Highland Ave. Friends Intermediate Christian Endeavor, Sunday evening.

The Kings Heralds of Glenwood Church will meet with Mrs. Meyers, 2008 Fairmont Ave., Thursday, Nov. 6, at 3:30 p. m.

The Glenwood W. F. M. S. will meet Monday evening, Nov. 3, with Mrs. Williamson, 2074 Fairmont Ave.

Mrs. Martha Davis of Wheeling, W. Va., is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Edw. Wollam, 415 S. Ogden Ave.

The Smugglers

By WILL T. AMES

(Copyright, 1910, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

There was no long, black, rakish lugger. There was no cave, wind swept and spray washed, carved by the erosion of a million years of breakers far into the face of a cliff. There was no secret underground passage leading from the back of the cave to the manor house of the titled leader of the smugglers; there was no clash of cutlasses; no band of bearded adventurers ready to lay down their lives for the swashbuckling, handsome young chieftain.

There was a trawler, an inshore trawler 30 feet long with a tiny cabin forward and a little glass hut like a wee conning tower to protect the steersman's head as he stood on the cockpit floor and run his ship, engine and wheel, quite alone; for she was a one-man boat.

Ashore, at a spot where the river road ran but half a dozen rods from the estuary, there was waiting a one-ton motortruck. And there was as fine a cargo of contraband in the trawler as was ever boated ashore from any lugger or battled over in the dark by soldiers and blue-water bullies, since custom houses, and their evasion, were invented.

Travis' part in the transaction looked easy. All he had to do was to meet the tramp a mile due south of Ducks and Drakes' light at ten o'clock, take the 40 cases aboard, run into the sequestered estuary which was his home harbor, anyhow, help the man of the motortruck load the stuff and collect $10 a case from the truck driver.

Four hundred dollars for a night's work is a lot of money to a trawler. And Ben particularly needed that $400. As to the risk—"Piffle!" said Kimpinski. Kimpinski, junk dealer, was the owner of the truck, and its driver for this occasion. "If the government was look'ng for some one for a few bottles of booze, would they let a ship-load of it go along the coast like a peddler, maybe? Sure, it's all fixed. Everywhere it is coming in. The coast guards—shaw! They can see nothing; the wind is blowing hundred-dollar bills in their eyes!"

There seemed to be sense to this. If the government were, indeed, as zealous in the suppression of contraband liquor as it was supposed to be, would it be likely to concern itself with small fry like Ben, and still permit a big ship to cruise the coast, dropping off her illicit cargo here and there to fishermen, tugs and coastwise schooners? Surely it must be well "fixed." And Ben was young and adventurous; he didn't put much stock in the eighteenth amendment anyhow and he needed the money; Caroline and he needed it.

Caroline was helping in the matter of the bungalow, too. She went into town five evenings a week and taught foreigners in the evening school. It's strange how things happen, how they dovetail; one of Caroline's pupils was Kimpinski's eldest son, a man grown but young. Kimpinski came to the school and called his son out into the hall. Afterward, near the door where Kimpinski had stood Caroline picked up a crumpled telegram, addressed to the junk man and signed by an initial. It said:

"Trr Benjamin Travis, trawl fisherman, Sandy Bay."

It was rather startling to Caroline. Also it happened that young Isadore Finkelstein confided to Miss Webster that Kimpinski was a bad ban, a law-smasher already.

Now it was that Caroline had just been reading an old-time novel—one of the lugger and cave sort—and as she read it the thought had come to her that the dashing, handsome smuggler hero must have looked a good deal like Ben. So, with what she knew about the mysterious telegram and Kimpinski's reputation, when Ben a couple of evenings later told her the next night he would have to be out all night in his boat—a most unusual thing—something jumped up in Caroline's throat and her heart beat in fear.

No man could have deduced that Kimpinski had gotten Ben and his boat mixed up in liquor smuggling. Any woman could, especially one who knew Ben's streak of recklessness, and who had been reading lugger stories.

Wherefore, as Ben's trawler chugged up to an anchorage three rods from the shore where Kimpinski's truck waited, on as dark a night as you can have when there are no stars, and when Ben, with six of the cases piled into his skiffboat, rowed ashore, four coastguard gobs and a coastguard lieutenant arose out of the hedge to greet him, and at the same instant two others stepped from behind the trees where they had been watching Kimpinski for 20 minutes, and grabbed the junkman by the collar.

"We'll just trouble you for the loan of your skiff, Travis," said the officer, "till we bring the rest of that stuff ashore ourselves. Then you can take her and go about your business. You're a very lucky chap."

It was at the front gate of Caroline Webster's home that they had it out the next afternoon. Caroline, pale, but determined, met Ben there and talked to him over the barrier instead of swinging it open, as usual, to mute welcome.

"I know what happened last night," she began, taking the situation by the horns. "It was I who informed—if you want to call it that."

Travis looked at her as if she had struck him in the face.

"You!"

"Yes, I, Ben Travis; you and I have been nearly three years trying to get a home together so as to start right. It has meant just as much to me as it has to you. And in my way I've worked just as hard for it as you have. But if we ever do have a home together, Ben, it's got to be one without a stain on it. It has got to be earned straight and kept straight.

"I could have pretended not to know anything about that escapade of yours. Or I could have let it go and then pleaded with you afterward not to do it any more. But that wouldn't do—neither of these things would do—for me. You've got a wild streak in you, Ben, that's got to be driven out.

"So when I made up my mind that you were getting into this crooked liquor smuggling—crooked it is, Ben, no matter what you may think—I went straight into town and saw the commandant of the coast guard station. I told them what I felt sure was going to be done, but I wouldn't tell them where nor who was probably in it, until they promised to let you go—and let Kimpinski go, too, for the information he could give them—if they could only get the goods and get at the people higher up, the big men behind the business. They didn't want to make terms like that, but by and by they consented. Today the commandant told me over the phone that Kimpinski had 'come through' and the men who are financing this traffic are going to the penitentiary.

"Ben, I don't know how you're going to take this. Maybe you'll think that a woman who will do a thing like what I did isn't a goodenough pal to tie up to. If you do, I can't help it. But if you come through that gate it's got to be as a man who is through, for good and all, with every thought of getting an easy dollar by breaking the law of the land." Caroline unlatched the gate and stood back.

And Kimpinski wasn't the only smuggler who "came through."

CONDOR'S REALM IS INVADED

Crossing of the Andes by Aviators Is Annoying to the Great Birds.

The Andes are becoming quite blase to crossings and the condors are understood to be highly annoyed at the constant invasion of their private residences at 15,000 feet or so of altitude. Since Jorge Newbery met the fate of the courageous pioneer there have been several successful crossings. The name of the former will always be connected with the Cordillera with the same melancholy celebrity that attaches to the death of Lord Francis Douglass and Mr. Hadow on the Matterhorn.

The most recent disturber of the wild mountain solitudes is a Chilean military aviator, Lieut. Armando Cortinez, who descended at Mendoza after leaving the military flying school ground of Lo Espejo, near Santiago de Chile. He broke his propeller in landing and was obliged to wait for spare parts and a mechanic.

As he went up merely to attempt an altitude flight and had no leave to cross the frontier chain, the lieutenant will be put under arrest on his return, while being given all credit for his plucky achievement. Discipline is discipline.—Buenos Aires Standard.

Confusion of Names.

Aunt Matilda came back from town, proud of her new purchase. It was a "transformation," one of those front pieces of hair which are reputed to make one look young. But Aunt Matilda's made her look more than young—decidedly "loud," if you please.

The tiniest piece went to tell mother. "Oh, mother, come here and see Aunt Matilda's confirmation," she called.

The high school nephew winked at his chum. "She'd better call it her consternation, I think," he whispered. "Judging from the impression it has created on me."

Joseph Welch Wickham was born in Harlem, Ohio, July 9, 1865. Shortly afterward the family moved to Westerville, Ohio, where Joe spent his boyhood days and received his education, graduating from the Westerville High School in May, 1886 and receiving first honors of his class.

On June 30, 1887 Mr. Wickham was married to Grace M. McCann. Of this union two children were born, Winifred P. Simmons and Lucile E. Wickham. Mr. Wickham came to Columbus in 1888 where some time later he took active part in the political life of the day.

He served six years as chief deputy under Chas. Galloway, county clerk. In 1900 he was elected County Recorder serving the last six years under the old fee system. For four years previous to his death he had been employed as auditor with the Industrial Commission of Ohio.

Joe was a friend to all and a firm believer in the goodness and mercy of God, in whose care we leave his spirit. Bsides his wife and daughters he is survived by three grand children, Bonibel, Marjory and June Simmons, two sisters, Iola Z. Wickham, of Columbus and Mrs. E. L. Daymude of Lansing, Mich.

The Forward Campaign which was launched by the United Evangelical Church on Sept. 7th is making great strides all over the church. The ministers of the Columbus District of the United Evangelical Church met in the Miller Ave. Church of Columbus on Tuesday and each pastor gave a report of the progress being made on the different fields. The reports were all very commendable. Plans were made whereby the week of Nov. 2nd to the 9th is to be the date when the million dollars is to be raised in the church for missions, church extension, education, superannuation fund, and the United Evangelical Home for Old people. The St. Paul United Evangelical church is planning to go "Over the Top" in her apportionment.

HOW TO VOTE DRY

Sample Ballots Marked for a Vote Against the Four Proposals Petioned for by the Wets

(THESE TWO PROPOSALS ON SEPARATE BALLOT.)

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION

|---|---|
| | (Proposed by initiative petition.) ARTICLE XV- SECTION 9-1. That a section to be known as Section 9-1, Article XV of the Constitution, be adopted to provide that the phrase "intoxicating liquor" shall not be defined or construed to mean any beverage which is in fact non-intoxicating and that no beverage containing two and three-quarters or less per cent of alcohol by weight shall be deemed an intoxicating liquor. |
| Yes | |
| X No | |

|---|---|
| | (Proposed by initiative petition.) ARTICLE XV—SECTION 9. To repeal statewide prohibition of the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, viz: Section 9, Article XV of the Constitution, and the statutes passed in pursuance thereof; to revive the laws relating to intoxicating liquors in force and effect November 4, 1918; to adopt proposed Section 9, Article XV of the Constitution, providing for the licensir of the traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage and for the limitation of the number of saloons in territory where the traffic is not prohibited under general local option laws applying to municipalities, residence districts within municipalities, townships containing no municipalities or townships outside of municipalities therein, providing for home rule in said subdivisions under general local option laws and limiting the definition and construction of the phrase "intoxicating liquor." |
| Yes | |
| X No | |

(THESE TWO PROPOSALS ON SEPARATE BALLOT.)

Senate Joint Resolution No. 4 Adop'ed and the Crabbe Act (House Bill No. 24) Passed by the 83d General Assembly of Ohio, Ordered Referred to the Electors of the State.

|---|---|
| | (By Referendum petition.) SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO 4, ADOPTED JANUARY 7, 1919, AND FILED WITH THE SECRETARY OF STATE JANUARY 22, 1919, RATIFYING THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PROPOSED BY THE 65TH CONGRESS. The said amendment ratified by the 83rd General Assembly of Ohio provides: "After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States, and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes, is prohibited." |
| X Yes | |
| No | |

|---|---|
| | (By referendum petition.) THE CRABBE ACT (HOUSE BILL NO. 24), PASSED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF OHIO APRIL 17, 1919, APPROVED BY THE GOVERNOR MAY 16, 1919 AND FILED WITH THE SECRETARY OF STATE MAY 19, 1919. To provide for state prohibition of the liquor traffic, for the enforcement of such prohibition and the repeal of all sections of the General Code inconsistent therewith. The act defines intoxicating liquor to include any distilled, malt, spirituous, vinous, fermented or alcoholic liquor and any alcohol liquid or compound capable of being used as a beverage, except for pharmaceutical, medicinal, sacramental, industrial, and certain other specified purposes, makes it unlawful to manufacture, sell, barter receive, possess, transport, export, deliver, furnish or give away intoxicating liquor, or possess any equipment used or to be used for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor, but the word "possess" as used in this act in reference to intoxicating liquors does not apply to such liquors in a bona fide private residence as described in Section 50 of this act; provides for a system of permits to be issued by a prohibition commissioner for the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor where authorized; authorizes the commissioner to issue additional rules and regulations relating to the manufacture, possession and sale not inconsistent with the act; provides for removal of liquors from possession, except those specifically permitted; makes it unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for liquors, or to advertise, sell, deliver, furnish or possess any preparation or receipt, etc. |
| X Yes | |
| No | |

FOUR WET PROPOSALS

Why Drys Vote "No" on Two of Them and "Yes" on Other Two.

"Why do drys vote 'YES' on two of the wet proposals and 'NO' on the other two? If all four proposals were petitioned for for by the wets, why not vote 'NO' on all of them?"

Because two were proposed by the wets through referendum petitions and two by initiative petitions. Initiative and referendum do not mean the same thing. If the legislature enacts a law, voters who object to the law can, unless there is an emergency clause attached, file a petition within a certain number of days, containing the names of 6 per cent of the number of voters voting at the last general election, asking that the voters pass on the action of the legislature. This vote must be taken at the next general election. The question at such an election is whether the legislature shall be sustained. Those who vote "YES" vote to sustain the legislature, and those who vote "NO" vote against sustaining the legislature.

The two wet referendum proposals is on sustaining the legislature in ratifying the national prohibition amendment, and in passing the Crabbe law enforcement bill. Those who believe the legislature did right in ratifying the dry amendment, and also in enacting a law for the enforcement of statewide prohibition, will vote "YES" on these two proposals, which will be on a ballot by themselves.

A proposal by initiative petition is one in which certain voters desire to initiate a new proposition, such as an amendment to the state constitution. Last year, for instance, the drys initiated a proposed amendment for statewide prohibition, which the voters adopted at the November election. This year the wets initiated two proposed amendments, one for the repeal of statewide prohibition and the other for defining intoxicating liquors. The side which initiates a proposed amendment is like the affirmative side in a debate. It affirms, and the opposition denies.

PRAYER

In these days when the Church of Jesus Christ is facing a reconstruction period it is the duty and privilege of every Christian to pray and to pray much for the success of the church that the church might fulfill its mission in the world. We believe that every church member on the Hilltop is interested in the prayer life of the church, and in order to strengthen this part of the church life there will be held each week one cottage prayer meting at a diffrent home each week. Everybody welcome. We want all who are interested to watch the Hilltop Record for announcements. Pray earnestly for these meetings that they might be a success, and that God may bless his people and his work. Meeting this week at the home of Mrs. Lane, 146 South Richardson avenue, Friday evening at 7:37.

IMPOSSIBLE FICTION

The pretty young wife, passing the shop window display of new spring hats, turned her eyes in the opposite direction and passed on, refusing to stop to notice them.

Receiving a communication written with a dull lead pencil on both sides of the paper the editor smiled and began reading it.

The head of the family, having just received a bill for his wife's and daughter's new Easter hats, chuckled to himself and nodded approvingly.

Getting up suddenly in the middle of the night the man rushed through the darkness and managed to elude every piece of furniture in the room.

Picking up the first hat she came to, the young woman tried it on, paid for it and walked out of the store without a word.

The Way to Get It.

The other day a man of the "old guild" type entered a downtown bakery. He announced his intention of buying a cake. One after another the obliging saleslady showed him, only to be told that this one was "to coarse," this one too yellow, and the others wrong in some way or another. "What I want," he finally said, "is an honest-to-goodness home-made cake. I don't mind the price, just so I get the cake."

"Then if you don't mind the price," retorted the weary saleslady, "why don't you get married and have a wife to make one?"

A Man With Push.

New York city has a push-cart citizen, seventy-eight years of age, who since December, 1917, has saved $838 in war stamps. He turned up at the Federal Reserve bank the other day and for his war stamps received one of the new treasury savings certificates, good for $1,000 January 1, 192[illegible]. Uncle Sam is greatly in need of thrifty citizens like the New York push-cart man.—Buffalo Courier.

RAINBOW IS OF REAL VALUE

Spectrum Analysis Shows What the Distant Stars Are Composed Of.

While it is true that the beautiful colors displayed by the rainbow are due to the passage of light through raindrops, the popular conception that the drops are directly in line between the sun and the bow is incorrect. The light enters the raindrop and is refracted back to form the bow. In this passage through the drop the different colors are produced which, blended, make our ordinary white light.

Two persons standing side by side see two different bows, though they present the same appearance.

Untold centuries after men had viewed this wonderful display of color in the sky it was discovered that light thus separated into its component parts had a story of great interest to tell. By passing light through carefully prepared prisms and charting the lines, by heating to incandescence various substances and passing the light through the same prisms to the chart it became possible to trace and identify the substance incandescent at the source of light. Thus by spectrum analysis not only the sun's light but also that of the stars as well is made to tell the story of the material of which they are composed.

Speaking broadly, it has been found that these bodies separated by tremendous distances from us are made of substances known as component parts of our own globe. The rainbow, long the mystery of the sky, has proved the bow of promise in leading to a very definite analysis of all light.

A Tribute to a Good Man

A good man never dies,
In worthy deed and prayer,
And helpful hands and honest eyes,
If smiles or tear be there.
Who lives for you and me,
Lives for the world he tries
To help; he lives eternally,
A good man never dies.

Who lives to bravely take,
His share of toil and stress;
And, for his weaker fellows sake,
Makes every burden less—
He may at last seem worn,
Lie fallen, hands and eyes,
Folded; yet though we mourn and mourn,
A good man never dies.

This can be said of our Brother, Howard S. Currier, who had so ingratiated himself into the hearts of our Sunday School officers, teachers and scholars. His faithful interest and service for the past ten months as our Superintendent, had placed the stamp of a good man upon him.

It is hard to understand why one so useful and faithful, seemingly just nearing the zenith of life, should be taken; but it must be his work was finished in the eyes of the One who sees and understands all, and we would but say, "His will be done," and all bestir ourselves to the more diligent performance of our duties, realizing that only in that way can we emulate our leader who "is not," for God has taken him.

I cannot say, I will not say,
That he is dead. He is just away!
With a cheery smile, and a wave of the hand,
He has wandered into an unknown land,
And left us dreaming how very fair,
It needs must be, since he lingers there.
And you, O you, who the wildest yearn
For the old time step and the glad return
Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love of There as the love of Here;
Think of him still as the same, I say;
He is not dead, he is just Away!

Glenwood M. E. Sunday School
Committee: Edith C. Williamson,
Abbie M. Chenoweth and E. W. Martindale.

The House Next Door

By SYLVIA PROST

(Copyright, 1910, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Edwards had rented the back suite of rooms on the second floor of the old-style house on Irving place because they promised complete isolation and security from interruption. It would take at least four weeks to revise the "Compendium" and he could not afford to leave town.

"Well, there isn't a soul to disturb you here, sir," Mrs. O'Brien promised him. "Sure, anybody that can get away this kind of weather is bating it for the seaside, and them that's left haven't got the strength to make any noise. You'll have the place to yourself."

Fortified by her assurance he had moved in and found it a haven of solitude for the first week. Then on the second Monday morning, just as he had settled himself to work in the narrow glass-inclosed porch that ran across the back of the room, he heard an amazing sound. High and shrilly sweet it arose from the yard next door, and above the small voices there was a clear soprano leading.

"Here come three kings a'roving, a'roving, a'roving.
Here come three kings a'roving,
With a ranzy, tanzy, tee."

Edwards pushed back his tortoise-shell-rimmed glasses irritably and strode to the windows. Down in the adjacent yard he beheld a ring of about eight youngsters holding hands and dancing back and forth as they sang. A green table stood under the sumac tree, with eight small painted chairs around it, and one large willow armchair. Standing up was the manager of the enterprise, undoubtedly. She was about eighteen, with smooth brown hair pushed back from a low, broad forehead, and brown eyes that drooped at the outer corners wistfully, at least so he thought at first glance, and it softened his intent. She wore blue linen, and all during that first morning Edwards found his thoughts straying from the "Compendium" to the group in the yard below. He had not dreamt there could be such complexities to mere child training. Before he realized it he was smoking before the windows, staring down with frank interest at the disturbers of his peace.

Staring Down With Frank Interest.

"And don't that beat all," Mrs. O'Brien exclaimed, when she brought up his noonday tray, and witnessed the invasion. "The house belongs to old Miss Stafford and she goes in for this social settlement work. You know what I mean?"

"I know it well," answered Edwards. "Well, once before in the summer she had a day nursery in her house and all the neighbors complained about it, and then she handed it over to convalescent soldiers for awhile, and now look what she's got in there. It's a backyard kindergarten, ain't it?"

"It appears to be, but I don't think I shall mind it. Who is the teacher?"

Mrs. O'Brien gave him a swift, suspicious look, knowing as she did the susceptibilities of the masculine mind, but Edwards went on eating placidly, and she told him what she knew. The teacher had sent over to borrow some matches the first day she was there, and her name was Miss Stearns—Eleanor Stearns, that was it—and she said she was from Dakota.

"And what was she doing down here, I asked her," added Mrs. O'Brien. "And she said she'd come to go to college, and in the summer it was too expensive to go home, so she was doing this work to tide her over. If they bother you, Mr. Edwards, I'll put in a quick complaint and chase out the whole bunch."

But Edwards assured her there would be no need. And mornings he would watch the little class dance to and fro in their games like swaying flowers in the wind, and sometimes forget the "Compendium," as he leaned back in his arm chair, half dozing in a day dream. She had such marvelous resources for entertainment. Some days they would model in clay, and on others colored papers would flutter about like butterflies under their fingers. Then again, they would have a story day, and gather gravely around her under the tree, or else they would dig along the borders, and try to coax the nasturtiums and sweet peas to brace up and bloom rightly. It seemed that she was living in the house all alone except for the caretaker, and at night he saw a lone light in the second floor back room that he knew must be hers.

Perhaps even he had not realized how that little daily group had woven itself into the fabric of his personal happiness until he missed it one day, and Mrs. O'Brien told him Miss Stearns was ill in the old house.

"Sure she's gone and visited around in them families, and caught something, measles, I think it is, or maybe it's worse. And not a soul to do for her. Mrs. Duplessy, the caretaker, says she can't be expected to care for her, and who the devil's going to, she don't know. Old Miss Stafford's gone to some rest place in the mountains and nobody knows where the girl's folks are. She'll have to go to Bellevue, I told her, and I'm going to call up the ambulance now."

"No, you're not, Mrs. O'Brien," Edwards ordered sternly. "I—I will take the responsibility of providing for her in the interests of—of—humanity."

It seemed a good explanation to himself as well as to Mrs. O'Brien. Not once did he go into the house next door, but he footed bills for two trained nurses, a doctor and a cook, and Mrs. O'Brien acted as guardian angel until there came a day when Edwards received a summons to attend the convalescent in the garden.

"I had to tell her everything," Mrs. O'Brien told him innocently. "She's the kind you can't deceive."

He found her alone, sitting in the big willow chair, in a new gray silk kimono, embroidered in blue birds and sprays of cherry blossoms. She held out her hand to him shyly.

"Oh, Doctor Edwards, I didn't know you lived next door," she exclaimed. He sat down beside her, smiling guiltily, telling her how Miss Stafford had lured him to the old neighborhood because it was quiet. And then they both were silent, struck by the same suspicion. Up at the university classes had Miss Stafford noticed the doctor's eyes lingering on his most attentive student, or heard Eleanor's praise of him? Had she deliberately relied on propinquity to close the deal? as Mrs. O'Brien would have said.

"I never, never can repay you for all your kindness," Eleanor said, softly. "It was wonderful of you. Why did you do it?"

He leaned forward and took her hand between his palms tenderly.

"I think I must be like your kiddies," he said, gently. And sang under his breath the words of the game they had first played under the sumac tree.

"I'm roving here to get married, married, married."

Mrs. O'Brien came to his window to shake a table cover and retreated hastily at sight of the two.

"The old schemer," she laughed to herself. "Ain't he the wise one, planning to get her all this time, and me thinking he was one of them troubling philanthropists."

Loose Milk

By DORA MOLLAN

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Mrs. Browning placed a severe straw sailor on her head and snapped the elastic under the heavy coils of her brown hair. Then she buttoned her trig tailored suit, carrying on at the same time a conversation with her daughter, who was dressing in the next room.

"A morning like this makes me wish some kind fairy would change this stiff chapeau into a sunbonnet and this suit into an old dress and sweater; then if she would transform my bag into a rake and whisk me away to Stonehill—oh! what's the use of wishing? But I can just smell that brown earth! Cheerio, Rena! Only two months more of grinding the elements of Latin into those flibberty-gibberty girls' heads! Well"—with a sigh—"we'll have oyster stew for dinner; don't forget, Rena, to run over to the store and get a quart of loose milk. I have examination papers to correct and won't be home early."

Rena, left alone, completed her toilet and hurried out. She didn't have far to go, as her school was only three blocks away. On opening the street door a warm puff of air struck her in the face.

"Mother isn't the only one who would like to be at Stonehill today," she soliloquized, "and grimy-faced kids get on one's nerves just as much as high school girls. Poor kiddies! They ought to be out playing in the green fields themselves instead of in the shadow of this eternally clanging elevated."

As often happens in the variable month of April, there was a decided change in the temperature that afternoon. Rena walked home against a chilly wind and decided that it would be a good time to stay in and start those gingham dresses for the country. Working on them would make the approaching vacation seem more real.

Rena was intense by nature. What she did she did with all her might. Glancing up at the clock after close absorption in her work, she dumped the fabric from her lap and hastened into the kitchen. Her mother would be due in half an hour anyway, perhaps before. Dinner was not started.

"Let's see, oyster stew. And I have to go out after the milk." Taking a small pail from its hook, she departed of nobody at all. "Now where's the cover?" But that article eluded her search. "Well, I'll have to go without it and mind my step, that's all."

Ten minutes later the hatless Rena emerged from the grocery carefully carrying the pail and, head down against the wind, hurried across the street, turned the corner—and collided with a young man who was approaching from the opposite direction. There were direful results. The "loose" milk no longer occupied the pail. Most of it spread out over the dark overcoat of the stranger, trickling thence to the sidewalk.

"Oh," exclaimed Rena. "What in blazes—" began the young man. But at this point he raised his head from rueful contemplation of the coat, looked at the embarrassed girl and shifted to this remark: "It's rather a mess, isn't it?"

Rena was forced to agree. "If you'll come up to my mother's apartment, I'll wipe it off with cold water, and I don't think it will show."

It has been said that the young man looked at Rena, but it has not been related what he saw; and it was what he saw, quite as much as the desire to have his coat made respectable again, that caused the stranger to accept the invitation with alacrity. Rena, with her laughing brown eyes and abundant, glossy brown hair, was easy to look upon.

Mrs. Browning, opening the door of the apartment soon afterward, heard laughing voices and followed them to their source in the kitchen. She beheld her daughter scrubbing at a coat busily while a young man with the sort of light hair that never stays put, and good-natured gray eyes looked on.

"Oh, mother!" Rena exclaimed laughing, "this is Mr. Morse. I was just returning from the store with the milk and I ran straight into him turning the corner. Most of the milk landed on his coat, so the least I could do was to offer to clean it off."

Mrs. Browning shook hands with the young man. He told her he was spending a short vacation in the city. "You don't need to tell me you're from the country," she said; "your color gives you away. Sit down and tell us what the country looks like this time of the year. We were longing only this morning to be there. We own a little house at Stonehill, upstate, and we hope some day to be able to buy a few more acres and start a market garden. It's our pipe dream."

Morse hardly waited for Mrs. Browning to finish speaking. "That's my work, market gardening! Just at present I'm managing a millionaire's farm out in Westchester county, but I've saved money enough to buy a place of my own, and I'm on the lookout for one."

"Stay to dinner with us, won't you, Mr. Morse," said Mrs. Browning, "and we can have the time of our lives, talking farm."

The young man looked his acceptance as the mother continued: "We'll fry the oysters; they'll be just as good that way."

All through the dinner young Morse talked mostly to the mother, but his eyes, somehow, turned oftener to the daughter. He was much interested in the acres adjoining the Brownings' little country place, and inquired who owned them. Then, waxing brave, he told how lonesome he had been during his stay in the city, and wondered whether, if he should get the tickets they would go to a play with him. And before the visitor left it was arranged.

It was the evening before his vacation ended that Anthony Morse walked thoughtfully from the subway to the Brownings' apartment. He had a piece of news to tell and a proposition to make.

The mother had been so wonderfully good to him, a total stranger. And that she longed to get away from school life, he was sure. But the daughter? How did she regard him? That was the question. She had been pleasant and friendly, to be sure, but—— when Anthony had gone thus far in his thoughts and Rena greeted him: "Good evening, Mr. Morse. I have to apologize for mother's absence, but she will be in shortly. There is a lecture at her school tonight."

Though Rena did her best to entertain him, Anthony was preoccupied. At one of his absent-minded replies the girl laughed. "What's the matter? Your mind seems miles away."

"It is. It's at Stonehill. I bought the land next to your place today. I have a proposal to make to you." Anthony was visibly nervous.

"You mean to mother, don't you?" asked Rena demurely, but with a laughing glint in her eyes. Morse flushed, but somehow gathered courage. "No," he said boldly, "the proposal is to you, but I have a proposition to offer your mother. I want you both to help me run a market garden at Stonehill on shares."

"Mother is fine at that sort of thing I'm sure she'll be delighted. But where does my share of running it come in?" asked the girl naively.

"You can run me if you'll take the job."

"Why, if you think I can do as good a one running you as I did of running into you—well—I'll try."

Why He Left.

Old Tom Parker, a colored servitor, had been in the service of a certain family for a long time, and so when he made the surprising announcement that he was "gwine to quit," his employer was for a moment startled into silence. When he had finally regained his composure, he asked:

"But why do you wish to leave Tom?"

"I'd rather not say, suh," replied Tom, politely.

"But come, come. I insist upon knowing."

"Well, suh, ef you must know, I's been heah now fo' mo' than twenty yeahs, an' suh, I's absolutely sick an' tired at de sight of yo' family!"

Age of Glacial Deposits.

A controversy has been proceeding between American and Canadian geologists, on the one hand, and Australian experts on the other, regarding the period of a series of glacial deposits in South Australia. The estimate varies in millions of years. Professor Coleman, of the University of Toronto, maintains that those glacial deposits are very much more ancient than the Australian geologists believe, and compares them with similar deposits which he found near the great lakes of Canada. Recently Professor David, of Antarctic fame, the celebrated geologist of New South Wales, visited the deposits. By the aid of radio activity he estimated that the deposits at Olary were between 800,000,000 and 900,000,000 years of age, and those of Sturt George between 450,000,000 and 550,000,000 years.

Gasping for Opportunity.

Once, when Sir Marcus Samuel was lord mayor of London, a certain civic dignitary, who was noted for his talkativeness, complained of the conduct of a fellow guest at one of the Mansion House receptions.

"Mr. Jones isn't very polite," he grumbled. "He yawned three times while I was talking to him just now."

"But maybe he wasn't yawning," objected Sir Marcus. "Perhaps he was only trying to say something."

Bugs That Walk on Water.

Insects that walk on the water by means of pneumatic floats are the familiar spider and the pond skater. The pond skater really walks on pneumatic floats. There are tiny hairs on the feet of this insect, so fine that they cannot be seen, that are arranged to collect air. The amount collected in and about these hairs is sufficient to allow the insects to walk or float upon the surface of the water. As each foot is put down it forms a cup-like depression, or tiny pit, in the water. The foot does not sink because the air bubble that has been formed is too light to let it. A fine covering of hair protects the water spider, too, and even if it is submerged in the water it is never really wet; the hair keeps a layer of air between its body and the water. It looks like a white pearl when below the surface.

Persian Perfume.

Persia saw the earliest development of the perfume industry. The priests in Egypt, who were the sole depositories of science, knew the secret of aromatic substances and prepared them. Egyptian perfumes acquired great celebrity, especially those made in Alexandria. Reserved originally for religious rites, perfumes subsequently became of current use among the wealthy classes. During banquets they were diffused through the halls and were burned in profusion. The Israelites during their sojourn in Egypt adopted the use of aromatic substances primarily for religious purposes and afterward for personal usage. The Jews were fond of cosmetics, and even used them to paint the face. All those perfumes were extracted from essence of trees and various plants.

Great American Historian.

In 1800, on the 30 of October, George Bancroft, the historian, was born at Worcester, Mass. Bancroft began his "History of the United States" at the age of thirty. The first volume was published four years later, in 1834. For nearly fifty years he devoted himself to the work of writing a full history of the United States. The twelfth and last volume was published in 1882. During this period Bancroft found time for important political service. He was secretary of the navy and minister to Great Britain and to Germany. He died at Washington on January 17, 1891.

Persian Perfume.

Persia saw the earliest development of the perfume industry. The priests in Egypt, who were the sole depositories of science, knew the secret of aromatic substances and prepared them. Egyptian perfumes acquired great celebrity, especially those made in Alexandria. Reserved originally for religious rites, perfumes subsequently became of current use among the wealthy classes. During banquets they were diffused through the halls and were burned in profusion. The Israelites during their sojourn in Egypt adopted the use of aromatic substances primarily for religious purposes and afterward for personal usage. The Jews were fond of cosmetics, and even used them to paint the face. All those perfumes were extracted from essence of trees and various plants.

Great American Historian.

In 1800, on the 3d of October George Bancroft, the historian, was born at Worcester, Mass. Bancroft began his "History of the United States" at the age of thirty. The first volume was published four years later, in 1834. For nearly fifty years he devoted himself to the work of writing a full history of the United States. The twelfth and last volume was published in 1882. During this period Bancroft found time for important political service. He was secretary of the navy and minister to Great Britain and to Germany. He died at Washington on January 17, 1891.

Smith—Did you ever go to school, Sam?

Sam—Sure, I was to the academy and dere I learned such school fellows as George Gravey.

Smith—Nonsense, Sam, you are referring to the study of geography.

Sam—Dere was Matthew Mattix.

Smith—You mean mathematics.

Sam—And I knew Jimmy Nastytricks.

Smith—You are referring to gymnastics, Sam. By the way, can you spell?

Sam—Sure. I got as far as m-u-l.

Smith—And that spells mul.

Sam—I stuck dere.—Boys' Life.

A Circus for Two

By VINCENT G. BERRY

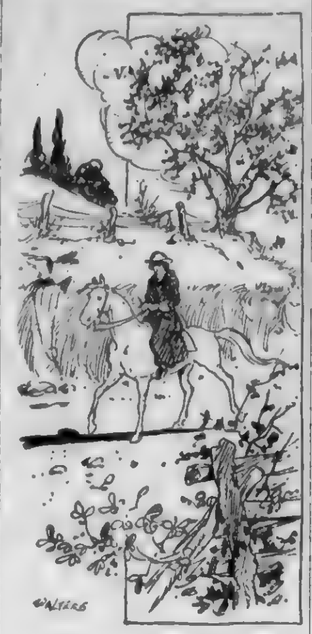
Away at the south end of the small city of 15,000 population the huge tents of the Mammoth Three-Ring circus were pitched. A strike that had tied up transportation somewhere along the line was responsible for the Mammoth's sojourn there, for it was a big city circus. The circus would be there for a week, too. Surely this city of Windsville was getting to be a wonderful place, the astonished natives thought.

But that was not all. In the glamor and confusion that had arisen with the arrival of the Mammoth, the citizens of Windsville had forgotten that the Puritan Brothers' one-ring circus was billed for a one-day stop in their midst that very week.



Even when the Puritan did arrive and pitched its one small tent on a northern lot at the outskirts of the city, the residents in the North end were the only ones to show any interest; a very weak interest it was, at that.

The Mammoth people were not going to get out of practice just because they were marooned in a small town. With all their splendor they launched out for their grand street parade on the day that the Puritan thought it was the center of attraction. So engrossed and enraptured were the Windsville folks with the wonderful parade that they failed to notice the dearth of pompous painted wagons that [illegible] the big parade in the center of the [illegible] had to turn down a side street [illegible] collision.

A few of the "neck-stretchers" on the [illegible] took their eyes from the [illegible] long enough to identify the rumbling wagons as gypsy caravans, and one or two did recognize it as the Puritan Brothers' "elegant" street parade.

The Puritan Brothers' circus was as dead as the brothers it was named after, and they had been dead for fifty years. It was hard for Mona Millson, star performer and owner of the Puritan, to make up her mind to this fact, but the clash at Windsville decided it for her. Her venture was a failure. As a circus owner she was a good clown.

Of course, they wouldn't have an afternoon performance. Even the North end residents deserted the neighborhood in favor of the Mammoth as the matinee hour approached. Mona's disappointment knew no bounds. She had hoped against hope that this stop would net receipts sufficient to keep the creditors off until the show could get on a better footing, but now all would go. Right in the town where she had started out she would end—her circus career a dismal ruin.

Seemed Fired With New Life.

Never had the atmosphere of tent life been so boresome as that afternoon. It was a glorious day outside and from over the fields Mona could catch a whiff of aromas that brought back pleasant memories—green grass, a running stream, wild flowers and a shady nook, were all just a few miles away. Why not go back to the scenes that had meant so much to her, the scenes she had never hoped to see again?

Joan, Mona's snow-white mount, the only attraction of the Puritan circus that remained in first-class form, seemed to know just the gait Mona wanted her to travel along those country roads. The handsome mare, away from the sawdust and canvas for the first time in many months, seemed fired with new life. As the wind caught Mona's raven locks and pulled them down over her shoulders, ten years seemed to roll off her age. The color returned to her cheeks, shaming the traces of rouge into oblivion, the wrinkles left her forehead, her eyes sparkled once more.

The old scenes had not changed. here was the same path through the me opening in the fence, just where to a stop in the road and allowed her mistress to alight. The fence was an easy vault for the white horse, and it whinnied with pleasure at the feeling of soft turf and green grass under its hoofs. Mona cried out with pleasure, too. The same old brook, the same old wild flower patche the same old shady nook! There she stopped, and gathering up the reins of her mount rested her head on the side of the handsome Joan.

"You heard it all, little flowers and little brook," she whispered. "You were all here when we quarreled. It was just such a day as this, wasn't it? You remember how angry he became, how persistent I was. 'I am going to be a circus rider—I am going to be like my mother,' I told him while he fretted and fumed. He said what a horrible life it was; he said it would mean the end of everything between us—that if I loved him I would not lower myself to go into such work—that is just what he said, wasn't it? And I told him I didn't love him. I hated him if he talked like that, and I thought I did. But I didn't, little flowers. I didn't, little brook. I loved him, oh, so much!"

"And he loved you, oh, so much!"

Mona became rigid. Had the brook answered in his voice? Were her ears deceiving her? Had her nerves got the best of her or could it be—could it be - was Roger there, standing right behind her? Roger was—but such a changed Roger, taller, more handsome by far, but with the same old smile, the same twinkle in his eye. She gazed at him for more than a minute, her heart throbbed violently. As in a dream his arms opened for her; she found her way into them and sobbed out her feelings on his shoulder.

"There, there, little Mona," he whispered just for her to hear, "don't feel so bad. Tell me all about it."

She gained control of her tears, but she did not leave the shelter of his arms. "It was just as you said," she told him, quietly. "My career has ended in failure—it was so bright at first, but after the big successes failure started in, and now we have ended up at Windsville, where I started. The Puritan circus, that has stood for refined entertainment in the sawdust ring, is bankrupt and its owner, Mona Millson, is a pauper."

"But hasn't it all been worth while?" There was a new note of sympathy in Roger's voice.

Mona's spirit came back in force. "Worth while, yes!" she declared, her eyes shining a new light. "Every success has been a paradise, every failure has just made a resolve for greater effort. It has been a great life. I can never leave it. I will fight on, on until I have achieved what I started out to achieve—refined entertainment in a circus.

"I am not beaten. I won't be beaten, even though I know that my real happiness lies here, in this peaceful valley country with you and among those that love me. It hasn't been a fair fight. It has been a woman against the big trusts—a woman against organizations like the Mammoth."

"Join forces with the Mammoth; it is your chance to make good your ambitions!" Roger was excited, too.

"What chance have I?" she laughed "The Puritan to them is a joke."

"The owner of the Puritan circus to the owner of the Mammoth circus is the most wonderful woman in the world. He wants to marry her. I am the owner of the Mammoth. I started out to find you. I joined a circus in the hope that that would bring me nearer to you, and look what it has ed to, after all these years! I know now why you left the narrow, bigoted country life—the fever of circus life is in my blood, too. Won't you join forces with the Mammoth, won't you marry the owner of the Mammoth? Mona, I need you, I want you so."

"I need you, I want you, too." Mona drew closer in his embrace. "Here where we quarreled, where we parted we have come together again. The little flowers and the brook know all. If only we could take them to our circus for two!"

The Shrimp

By R. RAY BAKER

(Copyright, 1913, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Has the shrimp been here again today?"

Jack Williams, with a height of six feet two, a circumference of 38 and a countenance usually genial, but just now decidedly the reverse, stood in the door of the living room and glared at his sister.

Josephine, the sister, looked up with a book in one hand and a chocolate in the other, and gave expression to a smile so sweet it would have melted an iceberg. But the brother was not an iceberg, and he refused to dissipate the frown that marred his otherwise attractive face.

"If you mean Mr. Angell—yes, he has been here," was Josephine's rather pert reply as she offered her brother a chocolate. "But please to remember that Mr. Angell is my fiance, and as such he should be treated with respect."

Jack thrust the candy into his mouth in much the same manner as old time gunners ramming charges into old-style cannon.

"He won't be your fiance if I ever get a crack at him," he growled. There's no use talking, Josephine, you can't marry that shrimp. Yes, shrimp! I repeat it! The fellow who gets my sister must be a strong man, not a lounge lizard, who can't do any more than sip sodas and chew candy. My brother-in-law must be able to protect his wife against the blows of the heartless world. This fiance business has got to stop, that's all."

With which Mr. Jack Williams left his sister and mounted the stairs to his own room.

As the self-appointed guardian of Josephine, Jack felt he was suffering personal affront in the attentions being showered on her by the diminutive Mr. Angell. Ever since the affair began, about six months ago, Jack had tried to meet up with "the shrimp," but so far he had not succeeded.

"Who Do You Think I Saw?"

This situation was due to the fact that the two young men lived in different cities. The Williams home was in Thompsonville, while Jack held a position in Steel City, 15 miles south, and Mr. Angell was in business in Seymour, about the same distance north of Thompsonville.

Every Sunday Jack came home to visit his father and sister, and the same day always saw "the shrimp" a visitor at the Williams residence; but Josephine's "guardian" could never make connections to be there at the same time as his sister's wooer, because the only train from Steel City arrived just 15 minutes after the only Sunday train for Seymour had left.

Mr. Williams Sr., declined to take a hand when his son approached him with the notion of Mr. Angell's undesirability. "Let it to Josephine," he advised. "She can take care of herself. It's up to her to be the queen mother of whom she wants to marry. Anyhow, the more you try to beat this thing you'll be for him."

But Jack was resourceful. He decided to bribe the neighbor boy to [illegible] and the signs and goings of the man who had designs on Miss Josephine's affections, and who, if appearances went for anything, had been successful in his efforts.

A full-length camera picture in an album gave Jack an idea of his prospective brother-in-law's appearance but Josephine refused to enlighten him as to the business in which her fiance was engaged. He could have obtained the information by some means, no doubt, but he hesitated to appear in the light of a meddler outside his own home.

"But before I let my sister marry a weasel-faced, puny pigmy, I'll go over there and slay him in cold blood," was Jack's oft-repeated threat. He really did not intend to be meddlesome, but he had his sister's interests at heart and felt bound to look out for her.

"Now it's time to act," young Mr Williams told himself as he washed up from the train trip, following the dialogue that opened this tale. "I'm going after the shrimp, this week sure. If I can possibly get away from the job long enough."

In the meantime, the shrimp, was draped between two seats in a parlor car, watching passing scenery with one eye and a page of a magazine with the other. Certainly he was not very prepossessing to look at, if one were in search of muscular splendor.

His face was handsome in a way, but he looked too small and frail to withstand the battering blows dealt out in the world.

Arriving at Seymour he had dinner and then escorted his mother to church. From the way he evinced interest in the words from the pulpit it could be seen that this visit to the house of worship was not merely a matter of duty. He was enjoying himself in the way a person is supposed to enjoy himself in such an edifice.

Monday morning "the shrimp" shaved, [illegible] a meager breakfast and went down to his office about [illegible] After opening the mail he went into a back room, where he [illegible] some physical exercise, by various gymnasium appliances. The shrimp certainly was not neglecting his physical well-being.

During the day Mr. Angell had [illegible] callers, most of whom he [illegible] the back room, instructing the office girl to permit no one to disturb him. This was his daily routine, and appearances were that Mr. Angell was an exceedingly busy man.

About five o'clock in the afternoon he was enjoying a respite from his business activities, being engaged in reading a page of the second section of a newspaper. His legs were stretched out on his desk at a comfortable angle, and he was smoking a big pipe which looked as if it might swallow him at any minute.

But Mr. Angell's relaxation was disturbed by a very strong thump on the door. A notice painted on the frosted glass invited all comers to enter, but this particular visitor evidently did not see it.

In fact, he was too much disturbed to pay attention to signs. If he had noticed one that hung out in front

"Let's see-Whose Birthday comes Next?"

If there is ONE time more than another when gifts SHOULD be given, it is on BIRTHDAYS. For with the gift goes a sentimental value that is equal to the present itself.

And what is more appropriate than rings, particularly as never before have they been designed with more care and beauty.

We take this occasion to suggest that you see our complete line of W. W. W. rings. The suggestion is unparalleled—many, many charming creations in Gem Set Rings, with gems to suit the individual taste. There are appropriate Birthday rings for ANYONE—and stones that match the months of the year.

These rings, as you doubtless know, from National advertising, are covered by a dependable Guarantee. You buy SAFELY and with every assurance when you buy W. W. W. Rings. As a matter of fact, there is no other way to sell goods—Dependability. It means continued patronage for US and ever-increasing satisfaction on YOUR part. These factors produce success.

It is really a liberal education in artistry to look over the trays of W. W. W. Rings now on display.

And remember—"SOMEBODY'S" birthday is tomorrow.

and had connected it with the man of whom he was in search, the affair might have terminated differently than it did.

"Come in," said Mr. Angell, in a weak little voice.

Jack Williams strode into the office and stood with arms akimbo, glaring down furiously at the occupant of the chair, who retained his reclining posture.

"Looka here!" roared Jack. "I've been wanting to see you for some months. I'm not going to say much, but I figure on acting aplenty. You're engaged to my sister, and I hereby announce to the world that there isn't any shrimp going to marry her. A man's got to be strong and husky, and able to take care of himself and her. If you can do it, you have my consent; otherwise—you quit, see?"

"I believe I comprehend," responded Mr. Angell, removing his feet from the desk and emptying his pipe, and folding the paper neatly on the desk. "Will you kindly step into the next room?"

Shortly after the evening meal Josephine was reading the same book and eating from a different box of chocolates, when her brother walked into her presence.

Across one eye was a bandage and part of his hair was plastered to his forehead with blood. Furthermore, he limped.

"Sis," he announced in a tired voice, "who do you think I saw just a few hours ago?"

He grinned rather sickly, disclosing the fact that three teeth that had been accustomed to rest in his mouth were missing.

His appearance startled her, and she sprang to her feet, all commiseration for him.

"Why—I don't know, I'm sure," she faltered. "Was—was it a mule or an automobile?"

Jack hung his head sheepishly.

"Nope; neither one. It was 'the shrimp;' and I'm here to proclaim that he has demonstrated his ability to look out for himself and for you, too. Why didn't you tell me he was a former featherweight champion of the United States, at present engaged in the pleasant business of instructing white hopes in the gentle art of boxing?"

NEWS HAPPENINGS

That Have Taken Place on the Hilltop During the Past Week

West High foot ball team put it all over North High last Saturday on Ohio State grounds to the tune of 27 to 0. This leaves the city championship to go to either West or East High. These two teams will play on Ohio State field on Thanksgiving Day at two o'clock p. m. A large and very enthusiastic crowd will doubtless be there and rooting will be hitting the "high spots" for both teams.

About 15 sheet metal worker contractors spent an enjoyable evening Tuesday at the new shop of Mr. V. A. Redman, 30 S. Wheatland Ave. After an interesting business session, a social hour was spent and heartily enjoyed by all.

Men's Gymnasium Class

The men's gymnasium class at Glenwood park has been changed from Saturday to Friday evening at 8:30 so all those that have been coming on Saturday evening take notice of the above change and govern yourselves accordingly.

The men of the Hilltop are urged to take advantage of this splendid gymnasium and come down and get some wholesome recreation. A little workout in the gymnasium will be better than a tonic for you, if you do not believe this ask Mr. Prior (The Hardware Man) and see what he says.

The man of the churches should get into this too, so the Athletic committee should get busy and get as large a representation of their men out as possible.

All men interested in gymnasium work such as calesthentics, mat work, volley ball, and indoor base ball get busy and get all the men you know are interested in this sort of work out on Friday evening at 8:30 at Glenwood Park gymnasium.

These men have been absent for a couple of periods, so let's get them out: Legg, Drumm, Alban, Hammerstein, Willey Phillips, Colburn, Hooper, Buscher, Garrison, and Fletcher. Get busy men and using Dunkle's motto, I'll say, "Let's Go."

Dr. Murray, Dentist, wishes to state that his phone is now installed in his office. The number is Hilltop 2865

Hilltop People Have Passenger Airplane

An airplane belonging to the Ohio Aerial is flying from the field along Sullivant and South Richardson avenues. The ship is here for the purpose of carrying passengers over Columbus and to neighboring towns, also for teaching anyone wishing to learn to fly. The men who have charge of it are former army fliers, and have been engaged in civilian flying since they were discharged from the army. Now is the time to see Columbus from above, and have an absolutely new experience.

NOTICE

Next Thursday being Thanksgiving Day, we are expecting to have the Record out WEDNESDAY, instead of Thursday, next week. Please get all news items, announcements, want ads., etc., to us not later than TUESDAY NOON.

Miss Dorothy Fuller will be missed by her friends on the Hilltop as she has moved to 12th Ave. on the North Side. Her young friends, Marjorie Slater and the other girls and boys are hoping she will spend many week ends and Sundays over here, however.

Tri Mu News

There can be no one but what enjoys good healthful entertainment. An excellent opportunity is being offered for this by the sale of tickets for the Glenwood Lyceum Course this winter.

A canvass of the Hilltop is now being conducted by the Tri Mu class, promoting the sale of these tickets. The first number falls on Thanksgiving night, Nov. 27. John B. Ratto will entertain by impersonation of different characters, keeping up a rapid fire monologue of funny stories the while. This entertainment alone is worth the price of the entire course. The other entertainments will include two lectures, cartoonist and chalk artist and a musical number and the Spanish orchestra of six girls. The price of the entire course is $1.00. Children from 8 to 19 years of age may purchase tickets for 50 cents. Tickets can be obtained by calling Bell Hilltop 1001 after 6 p. m.

There will be a meeting of the West Side Evangelistic Brotherhood next Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in the West Broad Street Presbyterian church, corner of Broad St. and Dakota Ave. The Brotherhood will begin a seasons work with several new working plans for the future. Rev. W. A. Perrins of West Broad St. Presbyterian church will tell of these plans. It is desired that ALL men of the West Side churches, together with ALL pastors be sure to be present. DO NOT FA L to be there, as it is important to you.

BIG W. O. W. PRIZE EUCHRE CONTEST

On Tuesday night, Dec. 9th, Elm Hall Camp will entertain with the first of a series of prize Euchre contests. Those who were present last year at these annual games will remember the enjoyable times spent on these occasions. It is the desire of all the members to endeavor to make these even more interesting than heretofore, and cordially invite all good euchre players to come and get acquainted with them. The time is 8 o'clock

The prizes will be awarded as follows: One grand prize, one ladies first prize, one gent's first prize, one ladies second, one gent's second and a booby prize. Each prize will be carefully selected and purchased from Hilltop merchants.

So come one, come all and let us make the first contest a record breaker. Tickets 15 cents.

Boys' Basket Ball Team

Two interesting games of basket ball were played at the close of the gymnasium period by the boys of West Broad School, Monday afternoon at the Glenwood Shelter House gymnasium. In the first game the Wild Cats beat the Fox 6-0, while in the second game the Zebra's were the winners over the Tigers 4-2. Both games were close as the scores indicate and the winner could not be decided until the final whistle sounded.

To create an interest in this sport a league is being worked out for each of the different schools and the schedule of the West Broad School is as follows.

Monday, November 24th. Fox vs. Zebra's. Wild Cats vs. Tigers.
Monday, December 1st. Fox vs. Tigers. Zebra's vs. Wild Cats.
Monday, December 8th. Fox vs. Wild Cats. Zebra's vs. Tigers.
Monday, December 15th. Fox vs. Zebra's. Wild Cats vs. Tigers.
Monday, December 22nd. Fox vs. Tigers. Zebra's vs. Wild Cats.

JOKE TO MODERN ENGINEERS

Old Fort McHenry Would Have Lasted About Two Minutes Exposed to Gunfire of Today.

Back in 1814 there was a bit of unpleasantness between Great Britain and the United States, and for a couple of years there had been quite constant interchange of courtesies in the form of solid cannon balls. The British fleet had sailed up to Alexandria, Va., and had exacted tribute from that city. Redcoats had marched down F street in Washington and set fire to the White House.

The most famous landmark of that clash between two peoples of the same blood is old Fort McHenry in Baltimore. One can tramp about this ancient fortification today and ruminate upon the development in fort building in a hundred years. For Fort McHenry is nothing more than a small area of earthen breastworks enclosing some ancient buildings, where powder was kept dry. There is a complete absence of steel and concrete, and the biggest guns of its defense were as simple as a muzzle-loading shotgun.

The roadstead to Baltimore harbor runs alongside Fort McHenry, and it was here that the British fleet drew up and maintained its fire "through the perilous night," which inspired the writing of "The Star Spangled Banner." The fleet was but 200 yards away, was of wooden ships, and yet this, one of America's greatest land defenses, was unable to harm it. Nor could the gunboats produce much effect on this old fort, which one modern shell, thrown from over the horizon would completely obliterate.

Such has been the development in warfare since our ancestors of a century ago played so amateurishly at it.

Over 500,000 pens are destroyed daily.

"That writer has became immensely popular."

"I suppose he gets many requests to write for various magazines?"

"So many that he has to use a printed slip of refusal, the kind he says he got so many of during his early struggles."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

No Different.

"Perfect uproar at the club last night. Bangs started the row and I guess he got more than he bargained for."

"I'm not surprised at that. A rough-house, like any other, costs more than the architect's estimate, you know."—Boston Evening Transcript.

The Bee in the Bonnet

By A. W. PEACH

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Rena Thatcher's pity for her patient was won immediately by young Doctor Case when he explained the situation. At the same time there was a faint suggestion that he was holding something back that he did not care to tell.

"I am sure, Miss Thatcher," the doctor said, "that here in this splendid home of yours in this beautiful valley Craig will be happy and will find himself. He is harmless—just a little out of his head. All you have to do is to keep him interested—keep him from brooding. He is a fine specimen of manhood except for the bee in his bonnet."

Rena awaited with interest the coming of Craig. She had had a nurse's training; and her professional instinct was aroused.

Doctor Case brought Craig the next day. Rena thought as she took him in charge that he certainly was a handsome fellow. Deep-chested, broad-shouldered, he seemed physically so strong that no mental trouble could claim him, as it evidently had done. His eyes were a puzzle. She saw them rest upon her with a look of approval that would have aroused her wrath if the glance came from a normal man.

"Treat him as you would a child, Miss Thatcher," the doctor said calmly to her in front of him. "He's harmless—just about half there. He'll do what you say."

The old colonial residence, which had been the home of her people for generations, was attractively situated; and she began her guardianship by taking him along the lovely roads. He was both amusing and entertaining. He would get his coat on wrong-side out. He combed his hair in weird ways until she took charge of the combing herself; and she combed and arranged the thick, wavy, rebellious locks with as much pleasure as she would have experimented with the attractive hair of a child. His mental trouble appeared clearly in his conversation. He would talk coherently enough for a space and then suddenly shoot off into some foreign subject.

So the days went by. She scolded him, praised him and petted him as she would a child, but she could find no way to aid him. She watched him one day while, dressed for work, he was grooming one of the horses which he particularly favored.

"What a lover he would make for some girl," she thought to herself before she realized what she was thinking, "if he were only normal."

Another week passed. Dr. Case came and she reported. "As much of a fool as ever," the doctor said brutally in front of his patient. "I'm not surprised. I used to think he was half-baked when he seemed to be normal—"

She caught a gleam in the dark eyes of her patient. "Hush," she interrupted Case, "he understands what you are saying."

"Oh, no," the doctor replied. "He may look intelligent, but he isn't."

The physician decided to leave him with her for another week. It was an unusual one. Little things came up during their strolls together that combined to startle her for a moment. Craig in his strange way was clearly falling in love with her. The thought amused her and at the same time aroused her pity. She had slipped her arm through his to guide him, and she soon found that he would not let her withdraw it. She found it necessary at times to "show him his place" quietly but forcefully.

Just about the same time that she learned to interpret rightly the look in his eyes and the meaning of his ways toward her, she made another discovery that puzzled her. He had slipped away from her, and learning where he had gone, she followed him. She found him chatting with a hunter, and listening from her cover, she caught in his conversation no hint of his unbalanced mind he assuredly did possess. When she rescued him and turned him homeward, however, the illogical thought began.

That night he was called to the telephone. She thought it strange enough and the wonder deepened when he turned from the 'phone and said to her, "Let's go for a stroll, Rena."

She agreed willingly enough, for she had come to enjoy the walks with him—even to fancy that she was walking with a sane and normal man whom she more than pitied or liked.

When they reached the river road and the light breeze brought to them the fragrant perfume of the southern flowers, he caught her hand suddenly and drew it under his arm. She thought nothing of the act, for it had long been familiar. But she was dumfounded when he stopped suddenly and turned to her.

"Hang it! I can't wait any longer!" he said as if to himself. Then——

She found herself drawn by strong arms close to him—in a strong man's grasp which she had never known. She was frightened, but she kept control of herself.

"Harvey, you mustn't do that. Please, let me go. We'll walk on to the falls. Please."

The arms tightened. She turned her face on his shoulder until she could see his. He was smiling, and there was some odd change in it. His voice as he went on was full of emotion. She trembled as she listened.

"My dear girl, I forgot that Case and I have been deceiving you. I have been making believe I was dippy. I had to. The best friend of mine tried to save a fine business from being stolen from an old lady by a pair of crooks. In order to do it, he had to embezzle funds. He broke the law. The crooks nailed him. I was the one man whose testimony could convict this pal of mine. I happened to be in on the deal. We fixed it up to the end that for a time I was to be mentally erratic. Case was called in, and the rest was easy. That telephone message told me that my friend had been able to get evidence against the pair who

WHITE CHIMNEYS

By DORA JONES

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Winifred had wired Baltimore as soon as she reached New York. If she lingered some of Leslie's friends were certain to recognize her and tell him, but she knew of one safe hiding place.

"Take Bel Air bungalow, Hartley Manor, Deep River. Three months."

Her agent there would understand, she knew, and ask no questions. She took the night train down and reached Deep River about seven. It was a run of four miles to the shore of the Chesapeake, and there lay her hide-away. As she drove along the narrow, winding shore road the first glimpse of its white chimneys above the willows brought a sob of relief to her throat. It had been their honeymoon home, two years before, and already she longed to break the tie that bound her to Leslie Forbes.

A fire had been laid in the living room. She knelt before the blazing knots and spread her fingers to the warmth.

"'Deed an' if Eph and me had jus' a known yo' was comin' we'd had all de comforts for yo', Miss Winnie." Aunt Dinorah watched her solicitously, her head on one side, as she sensed the trouble in every dejected line of the slender figure. "Ain't but a day since yo' was here, and Master Forbes."

Before Winifred realized the break in her nerves she was crying on the old colored woman's ample shoulder, and being petted as if she had been ten instead of twenty-two. After she had been helped into an easy negligee, and given breakfast out on the porch overlooking the broad blue waters of the bay, she tried to think of her next step.

If it had been anything definite, any real facts that she could bring out against him! But there was nothing except the suspicion in her own mind, and Leslie's own manner. That—and, of course, she knew he had been engaged to Mrs. Pomeroy four or five years before.

She had thrown him over to marry Cutler on account of money, rumor said, and now she was a widow and wealthy; she had engaged Leslie as her lawyer to settle the estate. That meant she was at liberty to consult with him at any time, to call him to her side at any hour, to renew all of the old intimacy and hide her interest in him under the guise of their business relations.

Leslie had laughed at Winifred's little hints against it, and had gone on in his steady, business-like way. Then had come the mysterious package for him by special messenger one morning, and he had not opened it.

It was from her, Winifred knew, and as it lay at his elbow on the breakfast table, she had waited for him to tell her the contents, but he had kept silence. Only the unusual sternness in his eyes and around his mouth, and the way he locked the parcel in the safe [illegible] her suspicious. Were they old [illegible] thin[illegible]

Fay Pomeroy had dared to send him to worry her, perhaps?

Finally, after a week of estrangement, he had demanded to know the cause of her manner toward him, and Winifred had told him—told him eagerly, longing for his quick assurance of love, but Leslie had closed his lips and told her absolutely nothing.

"It is not my secret," was all he said, and Winifred needed only the telephone message that came for him later to believe all she feared. The maid brought it to her. Mrs. Pomeroy was ill and must see Mr. Forbes at once about the old trouble. Winifred had given the message to him herself over the office wire, and had waited. Leslie's tone was clear and concise.

"I won't be home for dinner, dear, possibly not until midnight."

She had left on the evening train, without a word for him, with all of the unreasoning, heart-breaking misery and recklessness possible, and now the peace of White Chimneys enfolded her. She fell asleep in the porch hammock, her amber silk negligee cast aside for a little sport suit of pongee, her hair rumpled like a tired youngster's around her face.

It was here that Leslie found her. Worn from a sleepless night he came up the porch steps slowly and stood over her, hands clasped behind him, his gray eyes full of yearning and relief. Behind him ambled old Eph, his garden hat held between his hands anxiously, and Aunt Dinah shouted at him indignantly from the back of the house.

"Ain't got no sense, nevah did have, nevah 'spect yo' will have, ole man. Don't yo' know dey's makin' up?"

[illegible]ifred's eyes held no welcome [illegible]wakened and sat up to find [illegible]. Silently, unforgivingly, she [illegible] his explanation of how he [illegible]d her. It all seemed so sim- she had thought she had cov- [illegible]dight. Just tracing her to [illegible]k, he had called up the "Hotel [illegible]" and had located her at the [illegible]. There he had found she had [illegible] telegram to Baltimore and [illegible]rned to White Chimneys.

[illegible]ard me the exact meaning of [illegible]sense." He drew a porch chair [illegible]side her and waited gravely,

Estate Triple Effect

Gas heater is the next thing to a furnace in your home.

A clean, steady heat 24 hours a day, no dust, no dirt, no ashes, no kindling to split. Just a turn of the valve and a touch of a match and you have a fire. Thousands of Columbus homes of three to six rooms are being heated with one TRIPLE EFFECT. Sounds like a fairy tale. We have the proof. Come and investigate, and we'll tell you about it.

You don't have damp walls or sweating windows when you burn a Triple Effect. They are positively gas and air tight. Guaranteed odorless.

"I'm thankful you came here, anyway."

She bit her lip. He simply wanted to call up the old memories of their happiness there and trade on her love for him. And now she told herself she did not love him, not even with him sitting there and gazing at her steadfastly.

"I wanted to give you back your freedom," she said slowly, one hand pushing back her hair. "It's all been such an awful mistake."

Leslie took her hands in his firmly. "Listen to me, dearest. I was wrong not to have told you perhaps, but that poor devil was in danger and I dared not."

"Mrs. Pomeroy!" exclaimed Winifred.

"Ay, indeed, her younger brother Al. He's up at West Point, you know, and got into a pretty bad row there. Looked like suspension, but I've cleared the matter up, and I know he'll make good now. That package was his. He'd smuggled into his quarters a roulette outfit. Just a kid trick, but it looked bad. He hid it with his sister, but I insisted on making a clean breast of it, and his facing the music. So she sent the stuff to me. I could hardly tell you until the thing was over. It meant everything to the boy not to get thrown out, and I had given her my word. By the way, she's to marry Major Regan, did you know it? The announcements were in the morning papers."

Winifred stared out at the water in dead silence. All of the misery of the past week, all of her own unreasoning folly in jumping to conclusions came over her, and slowly the tears gathered and fell down on her pongee dress. Leslie wiped them off gravely.

"Rain always spoils it, doesn't it?" he asked gravely. "Any chance for breakfast? I've come for a little vacation."

"Oh, you old dear," she cried, helplessly. "I wonder what made me do it. You said once women had no logic or deduction. Was that it?"

Leslie laughed softly as he took her in his arms.

"Never mind the logic or deduction, honey," he whispered, "only next time just keep faith with me. Remember how we loved the old line, 'A little faith all undisproved?' Give me a chance before you take a train, won't you dear?"

"Same ole waffles and honey, children," said Aunt Dinorah, coming around the corner of the veranda with a large, tempting breakfast tray. "Ah allers tole Eph you all would come back for a second honeymoon, and dar you is, bless you."

Winifred laughed with sheer relief but Leslie was already at the waffles and the smoke from the new hearth fire curled out of White Chimneys.

were playing for the old lady's bread and butter. It may sound wild to you, but under the circumstances it was easy, really. The worst of it is I have been in love with you from the moment I saw you. Now I am not going to release you until you tell me you love me—or you do not! Which is it?"

Her mind was in a turmoil. He did seem at that moment beyond question utterly sane—voice and manner had completely changed. But the whole story seemed unusual—yet two men of chivalric type might do just what they had done.

Suddenly she decided. She did love him, as he had been, with a mother's love; she could love him as a lover. If—so she lifted her lips to his and was swung in his strong arms bodily from the path into his embrace.

It left her breathless, dazed, but even in her confusion she saw him, with an exclamation, suddenly yank his coat off and turn it right side out.

The blare of an auto horn sounded faintly. Craig looked up and caught her hand. "Case has come. Come on, Honey. I want to get even with him for sassing me to my face in front of you when I could not say a word."

She remembered as they hurried back the doctor's pleasure in saying just those things. Now she understood. But she understood even better than when she saw the two men clasp hands in silence and heard Case say: "Old chap, I thought you and Haynes were fools in a way to play such a game, but you've won. Congratulations, Miss Thatcher. I should offer you an apology and an explanation—"

"Cut out the explanation, Doc; apologize to her and then to me and then—congratulate both of us!" suggested Craig, [illegible] her beside him

That Have Taken Place on the Hilltop During the Past Week

On Thursday of the past week several lady friends from the North end of the city pleasantly surprised Mrs. Chas. Minten of 106 N. Warren Ave. with a surprise dinner and social afternoon session. The guest list was Mesdames Robert Nowell, F. B. O'Bleness and a lady friend, and Ira Watson from the North end, and Mrs. C. H. Nowell of 147 N. Warren Ave.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Smith from the North end of the city have moved into the property at 143 N. Warren Ave. recently vacated by Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Gilmore, who are now located in Newark, Ohio.

Mrs. Saretta Calhoun, step mother of Mrs. G. M. Russell of 158 N. Warren Ave. passed away at the Rest Home at West Jefferson, O., on Nov. 16, 1919. Burial at the Big Darby Baptist Church. Mrs. Calhoun was well known by many Hilltop residents.

Mrs. Ann Winifred Ad. ms, mother of A. T. Adams, 154 N. Warren Ave. passed away very suddenly at her home, 131 W. First Ave. on Nov. 20, 1919. Mrs. Adams frequently visited at the home of her son, Alvin, where she met and endeared herself to the neighbors and friends of that vicinity who will sincerely sympathize with the bereft family. She leaves to mourn their loss two sons, one daughter and seven grandchildren. Burial at Union Cemetery.

On Friday evening, Nov. 21, a weiner roast was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Day of 165 S. "Success" was not only the subject of Dr. S. S. Palmer at the Men's Fellowship supper last Friday night at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church but was also the comment of practically every man present. Promptly at 7:15 about 75 men took their places around the tables neatly decorated with candles and cut flowers when the toastmaster, Mr. Shields, asked all to sing grace, which was sung from the program to the tune of "Old Hundred." "The ladies" served steaming oyster stew with all the attachments thereto. Between courses the War Camp Community song leaflets were used and such songs as "Pack up your troubles" and "Smiles" also "Dixie" and "Battle Hymn of Republic" were sung by all the men. Leader Biddle and the quartette leading. After pumpkin pie, coffee and peanuts—the male quartette, Messrs. Biddle, Jones, Walters and Deems "broke forth." Toasts were given with "Chestnuts" and "latest jokes" interminglied by T. A. Jones, on "Stuffed Turkey" and W. H. Deems on "Pumpkin Pie" (both speaking from the 'fullness of their hearts?'") Dr. Palmer of the Broad St. Presbyterian Church then held the audience completely on the subject: "Success" —which he found to mean—"using worthily the powers with which God has endowed you."

Each man received a carnation. The ladies were thanked most heartily by all the men. "Auld Lang Syne" brought the meeting to a happy close. The supper was given under the auspices of the Men's Bible Class. Over one hundred tickets were sold by the men under the direction of Mr. C. J. Kohn. The supper committee included all officers of the class. Mr. J. C. Close deserves special mention for his electrical ability—he repaired the lights in time to shed proper light on Dr. Palmer's subject.

Come again men—the next one is in January, bigger and better than the last!

There were fifteen present at a birthday party given by Mr. and Mrs. C. L. McKenney, 67 Midland Ave., Friday evening, November 21st. The evening was spent in music and games after which dainty refreshments were served.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Rhea Jennings, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Jennings, 83 S. Oakley Ave., to Mr. Glen K. Schooler, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Schooler, 329 W. 9th Ave., Saturday, Nov. 22, 1919 at the residence of the officiating minister, Rev. J. N. Johnson, pastor of the West Broad St. Church of Christ. The couple were accompanied by Miss Clare Schooler and Mr. Clarence C. Cummins. The groom is a graduate of Ohio State University of the class of 1918. He is a member of Pi Kappa Alph and Alpha Kappa Psi fraternities. Mr. and Mrs. Schooler left immediately for a short trip and will be at home in Akron after Dec. 1 where Mr. Schooler is connected with the Sales Classifying Division, Statistical Dept. of the B. F. Goodrich Co.

On Picket Duty

By IZOLA FORRESTER

(Copyright, 1913, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Nancy had waited for the Carrolls all day long at the little village that lay on the east side of Mount Agonac. She knew there could be no mistake. Lois had written the directions down for her painstakingly that last day in Washington.

"Don't stop over in New York. Change at Grand Central for Adirondack express. Take shuttle from Pennsylvania to Grand Central. Run no risks at all of getting mixed up. Go to Eltinge Falls. Wait in Haddon's inn for John and myself. Will arrive on 2:19."

It was so typical of Lois to treat her as if she were nine instead of seventeen. Just as though she might have strayed along the way. She sat on the upper porch of the old wooden hotel staring rebelliously off at the wonderful panorama below her—a slim, medium-sized girl in dark blue traveling suit that only accentuated the bright red gold of her hair.

Two trains from the south came and went with no sign of her sister or John. Finally she went down in the cool, quiet dining room and ate a lonely dinner. She didn't know where to wire them. They were to have left Washington directly after she did, stop over an hour in Philadelphia to see John's people, and come straight on up.

As she stared anxiously down at her dessert of apple pie and whipped cream, the plump boy from the office laid a telegram beside her. It was from Lois. She tore it open thankfully, and gasped.

"Absolutely impossible to leave tonight. Petsie has measles. Go to lodge until we come. Get Mrs. Dupre. "LOIS."

Petsie! That was John, Jr., aged four years, the ruler of an absolute monarchy. And measles meant at least four weeks. Nancy set her lips firmly and frowned at the apple pie. All her vacation plans gone to smash because Petsie had caught the measles somehow at the very last minute. He had been fretful and cross for several days, and a little feverish, but Lois had said it was just the heat in Washington. He would be all right as soon as they got to the mountains. And now Nancy was doomed to spend four weeks in this place. The boy lingered at the door talking to the head waitress. She smiled at him invitingly, and he came back.

But It Was a Bear and a Large One.

Did he know any person in the neighborhood named Mrs. Dupre? He grinned at her reassuringly. Sure he did. He was Joe Dupre himself. His mother helped cook at the hotel in the rush time. Other times she cooked in camps. Nancy finished her pie in peace, and after dinner Joe took her out around the old flagged walk of the hotel garden to find his mother. She was a little, dark-skinned, French-Indian woman, with big, somber dark eyes, and a smile like Joe's. And she understood perfectly Nancy's plight. It was nothing, she assured her. They would go up to the camp in the morning and take Joe with them to cut wood and carry water and make trips back for mail and groceries.

"Is there anybody at all living near us?" asked Nancy. John had mentioned he as casually, she remembered suddenly.

"Only Andre Mandego. He is Mr. Hollister's guide, very good guide. No bother us."

Thus reassured Nancy had taken possession of the lodge to wait on Petsie's spell of measles. It wasn't half as bad as she had imagined. The lodge overlooked a beautiful mountain lake. There was a huge fireplace on the wide porch, and in the living room low bookcases built in everywhere filled with books that John had had sent up for their vacation.

But the lake lured her. Joe found an old boat that had done duty in past summers, and tried to patch it up for her, but still it leaked somewhat. She learned how to paddle as well as row, and liked Joe's canoe better than the old tug, as she named the rowboat. And the third week, as she paddled cautiously around close inshore she discovered the rising smoke from another campfire. Doubtless it came from Mandego's place, she thought, and paddled on without curiosity. After all, doing picket duty wasn't so bad. She rather enjoyed the responsibility.

And suddenly she heard a peculiar sound in the water behind her, a heavy swish and deep breathing. Just one glance back at the dark shaggy head lifting from the water and Nancy would have fainted if it had not been for some good old pioneer strain far back that held her steady. But it was a bear and a large one, and paddling steadily in the wake of the canoe. She couldn't swim at all, and the distance to shore seemed a mile, when it was barely a stone's throw. Trying to keep her nerve and strength, she paddled faster and faster, but the bear gained on her, and all at once her paddle struck a sunken tree, caught and snapped in half.

"Don't jump. Keep quiet!"

The voice came from the shore, but Nancy had covered her face with her hands. It was a tragic moment, and yet for the life of her she couldn't keep out of her head a crazy little rhyme the girls had said at school:

"Algy met a bear,
And the bear was bulgy,
And the bulge was Algy."

There came the crack of a rifle and a floundering in the water behind her; then a canoe slipped out from shore and a man sent a second shot into the bear, killing it. Nancy looked up, her hands still on her face. He was white and young, and very good looking. And the worst of it was he didn't appear one bit concerned over her. He was too busy throwing a rope over the bear to tow it in behind him.

"Wonder if he'll swamp me," he laughed. "Some bear, isn't he? You were corking, the way you led him in for me."

"I didn't want to lead him," said Nancy with a sense of outraged dignity. "He was chasing me, you know!"

"Well, you kept your head, anyway. Some girls would have fallen overboard the minute they saw him. My name's Jack Hollister, and I think we're neighbors. You're Miss McAlarney, aren't you? I've heard Lois and John speak of you. Are they up at the lodge?"

The two canoes came into shore side by side. Not for anything would Nancy have confessed how shaky she felt every time she stole a look back at the dead bear—not with this debonair Nimrod chatting to her as if they had met at some happy, cozy little tea in town.

Mrs. Dupre took the news also stolidly, merely nodding her head.

"He one ver' fine man," she said fervently. "He kill all bear."

Two weeks later Lois arrived with a pale, chastened Petsie and a wearied, harassed John in tow. Nancy met them at the falls station, tanned and perfectly happy, with a strange object dangling around her neck, polished, curved claws strung Indian fashion on a thong of deer hide.

"You poor, lonely, forsaken child!" exclaimed Lois. "Did you think we were never coming? What on earth are those claws for?"

"They're a symbol of romance," said Nancy, placidly. "The bear nearly ate me——"

"Bears don't eat people," interrupted John, bluntly. "You don't have to go any farther. Jack's written to me, and we—Lois and Petsie and myself—have agreed to permit him to protect you from all bears in the future. I've known him since he was ten, and when Lois asked you up this year she hoped——"

"John!" Lois' tone was final. Nancy laughed softly, her fingers holding the claws.

"But the bear really started it," she said.

The men's gymnasium class at Glenwood park has been changed from Saturday to Friday evening at 8:30 so all those that have been coming on Saturday evening take notice of the above change and govern yourselves accordingly.

The men of the Hilltop are urged to take advantage of this splendid gymnasium and come down and get some wholesome recreation. A little workout in the gymnasium will be better than a tonic for you, if you do not believe this ask Mr. Frior (The Hardware Man) and see what he says.

The man of the churches should get into this too, so the Athletic committee should get busy and get as large a representation of their men out as possible.

All men interested in gymnasium work such as calesthentics, mat work, volley ball, and indoor base ball get busy and get all the men you know are interested in this sort of work out on Friday evening at 8:30 at Glenwood Park gymnasium.

Wasted Years

By LILY WANDEL

Bretna Sterrett sat in the crowded depot waiting for the train that was to take her back to the home she had left reluctantly and heavy-hearted nearly twenty years ago. She dreaded the return, it was not home to her; home was what she was now leaving—forever. She hated to go back and see what might have been, the happiness she could have claimed if she had stayed. If she had not listened to what she had thought was the call of duty. Twenty years of wasted effort, yet she had told herself she was happy; but now she knew differently, her eyes were opened. She had given up the best years of her life and now, no longer needed, unwanted, she must go back and pick up the remnants of the old forgotten life.

Sitting there in the bustling waiting room, she remembered her girlish attachment for Clifford Holmes, now magnified by lonesomeness and spinsterhood to a great love. No actual engagement had existed—merely an understanding, the unbinding country "keeping company." And Bretna had always feared the dancing-eyed Nancy Dove like a premonition of what would be realized. Then came the crisis in her life. In a distant town her sister died. A letter followed from the despairing husband, William, the father of five small children.

After a night of agony of indecision, torn between duty and the thought of losing Clifford, Bretna wrote that she would come for a few months. She had hoped that her sweetheart would speak before she left, but his words were vague, unsatisfying. In a few weeks came letters from home linking the names of Clifford and Nancy. The children, having the measles, prevented her rushing home. Shortly after their recovery, came Clifford's brief confirming note. Nancy had stolen her sweetheart.

"Bretna, don't you remember me, Nancy Dove?"

After the death of her parents the following year she cut all communication with her home town, more than ready to yield to the new life and forget the old.

Bretna looked back at the wasted years of toil, unselfish burden-bearing—a life sacrificed. And for what purpose. To be dumped aside now that her labors were no longer needed. The youngest and last of the five children had married, and William had decided to make his home with his favorite daughter. The house, grown so dear to Bretna, was rented. There was nothing for her but to go back to the village and witness the happiness that might have been hers.

And she had loved them so dearly. Stuart, the oldest, and the twins, Frank and Lee; Jimmie, her favorite and the youngest, and pet, little gold-en-haired May. Oh, she would tear them all out of her heart, even William, who had always been so kind and good.

Bretna found the little cottage, her inheritance, and began in a half-hearted way to clean up and keep house. She was lonesome, desperately, homesick and ashamed! Yes, mortified, to face the old friends and acquaintances who knew of her love affair. She resented their pity. Every time she nervously entered the village stores she heard the whispering. Once she caught: "Yes, Nancy stole him away," and "Poor girl." Then all the more she enveloped herself in a mantle of ice and kept everbody miles away with the coldest of nods.

Most of the day she worked in the stony vegetable patch and the evening sat alone and desolate in the vine-covered porch, trying not to think of William's cheery voice and May's light laugh, or hear the old familiar creak of the garden gate announcing a visit of one of the married sons.

"Wasted years, wasted years," croaked the distant frogs, and Bretna's trembling lips repeated the words even up in the low-ceilinged bedroom far into the night.

Then came the berry season, and Bretna, with pails and sunbonnet, wandered over the wooded hillsides. In the heat of the day she sought a shady spot to partake of the simple lunch she carried. Occasionally, another berry-picker would attempt to be sociable, but Bretna refused to respond. But one very hot noon hour a gray-haired woman, bent and tired-looking, awakened her sympathy; she offered the stranger a cup of cold coffee. The woman extended her red, work-stiffened fingers, staring, but made no move to grasp the cup.

"As I live, it's Bretna Sterrett!"

Bretna opened her eyes very wide. She honestly did not recognize the hollow-eyed, shabby dressed woman.

"Bretna, don't you remember me, Nancy Dove?"

"Nancy Dove!" she gasped, and all the old bitterness sprang to her lips. "You, who stole—" and stopped quickly, flushing.

"Yes, I took Clifford away from you," finished the woman listlessly. "I got him and all that went with him. All the heartaches, the misery, the gambling, the debts, disgrace and shame, even abuse! And you—I know. Somebody in the village met May Brownley; they told me how happy you were, how the whole Brownley family adored you, how you brought up the children, won their love and respect! Oh, what's the use of talking about it!"

Bretna, who stared in amazement, suddenly felt something in Nancy's tired voice pull at her heart. She took one of the roughened hands within her own. "Nancy," she asked, softly, "you have not been happy?"

"Happy?" interrupted the other woman rising. "Bretna, such poverty, such wretchedness as mine, you have not known! I must be going. No, don't live in the village. I won't tell you where; don't come. I'd rather you would not see my home life."

And when she had disappeared Bretna still sat there with wide open eyes and parted lips. Like racing steeds thoughts came and brought clear, bright pictures of her wasted years—of little May cuddled in her arms, the boys couched around, listening to some fairy-tale. Oh, she could feel their warm, childish kisses! Again, she saw herself tucking Jimmie in bed, hearing Stuart's tale of woe. Then a candy pull on a stormy night, how the old kitchen echoed with laughter! And the halloween parties! Oh, the time William had insisted upon her dressing up as Old Mother Hubbard! The Christmas dances when the children were older, how the boys had always insisted upon her dancing, too! And their love affairs! Jimmie had fallen in love so often and she alone knew how to soothe his broken heart or mend his enthusiasm over the "new" girl! And when the boys had married came May's admirers. She could see herself crouched on the girl's bed hearing the recital of an evening's triumph! And when May was at parties, she and William had sat in the old comfy living room talking and planning. She remembered now how he had come to her with each little problem about business or the children. They had laughed and wept together.

Wasted years she had called them! Those years so golden with love and joy! What memories to feast on in the years to come! How rich she was! Twenty years full to overflowing of happy days burnished with the love of six persons, surely such remembrances were bright enough to last a hundred years!

To the first villager she must speak, for the warmth of her heart demanded communication with fellow-beings, and happy with the success of the cheerful smile she had won, walked quickly up the lane to her little lonely cottage.

At the porch steps she stopped short, incapable of moving, for there stood William, big, handsome, smiling wistfully.

And when he had led her to the hard little bench, he asked reproachfully: "Don't you ever go to the post office for mail? We worried, we waited. Something was the matter. We knew you could not forget us. Bretna," after a pause, "it didn't work, my living with the honeymoon couple. I've been lonesome, homesick, the kind that is slow death. Every moment, everywhere, I was looking for you, and I was lost, Bretna, and I suffered. Too old to transplant, I guess." His voice grew low and tender with pleading. "I wanted the evenings back again when we two sat by the sitting room lamp; do you remember, Bretna? They were happy evenings; outside, the rain and wind; inside, the warmth and light; you mending and I reading aloud. Don't you miss it at all, Bretna?" he asked anxiously. Then, when she nodded ever so slightly, he went on: "I've arranged with the tenants to move next week. Will you come back to the old home with me as my wife?"

Picnics and Patriots

Constance Scuddkr

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The Fairfield family sat around the breakfast table. Mr. Fairfield was absorbed in the morning paper that bore the date of May 28, 1918. He spoke abruptly: "Mother, be sure and read the 'Watchman' column today. That man hits the nail straight on the head every time. And, Carl, that shindig of yours for Memorial day will have to be called off. Seems there's been a notice in the papers that the committee of arrangements for the parade wants the loan of cars to carry the old vets. They need twenty. Memorial day is two days off and exactly four people have volunteered. Anyone who owns a car and can get by without offering it after reading that article belongs in the slacker column."

Carl waited dutifully until his father had finished, but not an instant longer. "But I don't get you, dad; I asked you a month ago for the car on that day and I've invited Grace Garfield to go with me and I'm to take four others. It's too late for me to back out now."

"Not another word, Carl," his father interrupted sternly; "you are to drive that car in the parade Thursday. The men in the factory have volunteered to work on the holiday to get out that rush war order, and I can't do less. I'm late now, but I'll phone our name in before I leave."

The family kept quiet while Mr. Fairfield's voice sounded at the phone and until the front door shut behind him. Then Carl broke forth in that heart-breaking tone which only seventeen can assume. "Mother, I simply won't stand for it. We made all the arrangements a month ago for that picnic and father promised then I could have the car. It isn't fair. There are plenty of other people who can lend their cars for the parade. And after I was lucky enough to get Grace Garfield, when four other fellows were after her!"

Here Jane Fairfield, aged eight, interrupted. "I know Mary Garfield. She told me her sister was going to the picnic with my brother, because he had such a swell car. She's awful cross. Always shoos Mary out of the room when she has a fellow."

"Oh, plug it up, will you, Jane? You make me tired, anyway. Mother, can't you make father see reason, somehow? I'd look a dud, now, wouldn't I, telling her I couldn't take her when the other fellows have gotten some one!"

Mrs. Fairfield looked perplexed. "You know your father's creed, Carl; every man, woman and child must be 100 per cent patriotic if the war is to be ended this year. The 'Watchman' preaches that in his column every morning, and father swears by him. Why don't you explain to Miss Garfield and ask her to go for a ride after the parade?"

That evening, at the Fairfield dinner table, Carl ate what was placed before him in sullen silence, taking no share in the conversation until Jane remarked, apropos of nothing: "Mary Garfield says her sister's awful mad at you, Carl—says you're an old stick-in-the-mud and haven't got any gumption, anyway, or you wouldn't let your father boss you around so."

Carl turned wrathful eyes upon his sister, muttering: "Just wait till I get you alone, smarty."

Mr. Fairfield paused in his recital of how much work his men had turned out that day, to reprimand his small daughter, but there was a twinkle in his eye as he addressed his son: "Hard luck, Carl; our mother tells me you had captured the prettiest girl in the school for the picnic. Well, I had an eye for a pretty girl myself when I was young," with an appreciative glance at his wife, who at forty was still a handsome woman. "Plan a picnic of your own some day soon and you can have the car."

"Thank you, sir," answered the boy, but with the thought of his treatment at the hands of the fair Grace still rankling in his mind.

On Memorial day, promptly at half-past six, we find the Fairfield family seated around the dinner table as usual at that hour. Carl looks very cheerful as he answers his father's questions about the parade and tells the names of the veterans whom he can recall.

"Yes," pipes in the irrepressible Jane; "he wouldn't take me; said there wasn't room for any one but veterans. What war was that girl in that you had with you, Carl?"

"I was going to tell you about that when I got to it, you butter-in," replied Carl in what he meant for a casual tone. "That was Natalie Burrows, old Mr. Burrows' granddaughter. She came out of the house with him when I called there and seemed rather concerned about his going. The old chap wasn't feeling very well. So I asked her to go along, as there was room for one more."

"How does she rate—second prettiest in school?" teased his father.

Mrs. Fairfield came to Carl's assistance: "Why, you know her, father; she's that pretty girl in Mead's bookstore."

"I should say I do," exclaimed Mr. Fairfield; "the one with the red-gold hair! Go to it, son; if your father was a few years younger he's cut you out."

"She likes you," said Carl, his voice a trifle patronizing; "she told me so. You said I could have the car some day to make up for missing the picnic; so I asked her to go for a ride Saturday afternoon—that's the only time she has off."

Here Jane, who thought she had been left out of the conversation quite long enough, broke in: "Mary Garfield says that Burrows girl bleaches her hair; says her sister told her so when she saw her in the car with you this afternoon."

What Carl replied to this we won't set down here; suffice it to say that his paternal parent reproved him as sternly as was consistent with his laughter.

A year has gone by; a year fruitful of many great events and changes in the big outside world. As we look in on the Fairfield family, on a sunny morning toward the last of May in the year 1919, we find that the strained look has left Mr. Fairfield's face and that he eats his breakfast in a more leisurely manner. Mrs. Fairfield remarks in a relieved tone that she is not due at the Red Cross rooms nor the canteen that day. Carl has improved in appearance. He holds himself better, is better set up—they have introduced military training into the school he attends. "Father," he remarks, "I entered our car in the Memorial day parade. Do you mind if I drive it? The parade is going to be a dandy this year. They're going to have the two regiments that are over to the fort waiting to be mustered out, and all of the Forty-ninth they can get hold of."

"Certainly you may, son. Mother is in it, too, and Jane marches with the Junior Red Cross. I'm going to sit in the window and watch it go by, since I missed it last year."

"Going to take old Mr. Burrows?" asked Jane, with a grin.

Carl answers without any evasion: "Sure, and Natalie, too, if you want to know."

"Bring Natalie home to dinner with you, Carl," Mrs. Fairfield interposes; and the boy smiles his thanks at her.

True to her sex, Jane tries for the last word: "Mary Garfield says her sister says that Burrows girl is dead stuck on you; says it's because our father has a lot of money." Jane paused to swallow what was in her mouth before continuing; but Carl spoke in:

"Now you let up on that for good and all. Don't you ever mention that Garfield brat to me again; nor her uncle up minny of a sister, either—get me?" Evidently Jane did, for she remarked meekly: "I'd rather have Natalie for a sister, anyway. She lets me stay when you try to drive me out of the room."

Mr. Fairfield's hearty laugh rang out. "Guess you two are quits. Better call it off." Then turning to his son, he asked seriously: "Sorry you gave up that picnic last year, Carl?"

"You bet, I'm not, father," the boy answered. "Picnics are all right in their way; but they don't belong on the one day in the whole year given up to honoring our patriots."

NEWS HAPPENINGS

That Have Taken Place on the Hilltop During the Past Week

Mrs. Lulu Dorsey, wife of James T. Dorsey died at her home, 136 N. Park Ave., Thursday morning, Nov. 27, of illness resulting from influenza, last February, which caused her to be confined to her bed since that time. The funeral services were held in Glenwood church Friday afternoon with burial at Pomeroy, Ohio. The Hilltop Undertaking Co. having charge. Mrs. Dorsey was a member of the Rebecca Lodge of which she was the organizer; also Order of Eastern Stars. She leaves besides her husband, 3 daughters and 3 sons, also a sister and brother-in-law.

Mrs. Mary Frances Iams, 70 years of age, widow of Jackson Iams, died of complications, Friday, Nov. 28th, at her home, 89 S. Hague Ave. The funeral services were held Monday afternoon at the residence, with burial in Big Darby Cemetery. She is survived by five daughters, one son, four brothers, fourteen grandchildren and seven great grandchildren.

Mrs. Ora Alice Owen, aged 52 years, wife of John W. Owen, died of complications resulting from influenza at Las Cruces, New Mexico, November 25th, after being at that place about six weeks. The body was brought home to Columbus and taken to the residence of her daughter, Mrs. T. J. Hunter, 28 S. Burgess Ave., where the funeral services were held Sunday. Burial took place in the Sunbury Cemetery. The Hilltop Undertaking Co. having charge. Besides her husband she is survived by two daughters and four sons.

Mrs. Magdalena Ross, aged 78 years, widow of Mr. Courtland Ross, died of complications on Friday, November 28th at her home, 2686 W. Broad St. The funeral services were held at the home on Saturday and the body was taken to Cardington, Ohio for burial. She is survived by one sister and a niece.

Camping in Morocco.

Camping is a fine art in Morocco, where the roads are almost impassable, and the chief means of transportation is by caravan. All day one rides across the great plains, prodigally covered with iris, daffodils, daisies, buttercups and wild lavender. Perhaps a wild band of horsemen will gallop by, their robes, sea green, salmon colored, and blue, streaming in the wind, their horses richly caparisoned like those of some crusading king.

Occasionally one skirts a little village built of mud and wattle and barley. Here and there the white domed shrine of some saint rises serenely above the plain. And at sundown the shepherds playing on their reed flutes drive their flocks of sheep and goats home from pasture. Then it is time to pitch the tents near a grove of orange trees or on a fairy carpet of red anemones. One dines on roasted sheep and couscous, and is lulled to sleep by the songs of the guard under the intense blue of the African sky.

Knew His Post Office.

"I have placed my will in my safety deposit box," said J. Fuller Gloom. "My pockets are filled with condensed and desiccated foods. I shall attach the end of this stout cord to a convenient projection, light a candle and enter, crawling carefully among the stalactites and stalagmites, paying out the cord as I go, and—"

"Great heavens! Mr. Gloom," ejaculated an acquaintance. "Are you contemplating exploring some vast and dismal cavern?"

"Yes, I am going into our Kansas City post office for the purpose of having weighed, purchasing stamps for and mailing this parcel post package."—Kansas City Star.

Wiljofclemperfoch.

The city of Castelsarrazin, France, has named its most beautiful avenue "Wiljofclemperfoch," thus honoring in one stroke five great figures in the war—Wilson, Joffre, Clemenceau, Pershing and Foch—by using the first syllable of the name of each.

Beautiful Petrified Trees.

Within the stretch of Arizona's painted desert of brilliant hues lies one of the marvels of the land, the 60 square miles of petrified forest. There the preserved for all time fallen tree monarchs, millions of years old, turned to rocks. Mammoth trunks, sometimes five feet in diameter and 50 feet in length or cracked smoothly into blocks, are transformed into everlasting stone, beautiful in quality and coloring—quartz, agate, chalcedony, jasper and exquisite opal, infinite in the variety of delicate tint and rich shading. The method of petrifaction by which the giant trees became rock was one of the strange alchemies of nature. Probably the wash of water from hot mineral springs rich in silica was the cause. The chemical, permeating the tissues of the plant, acted as a hardening agent, preserving the original structure and detail of the tree with astonishing perfection.

A Policeman in the Spotlight.

When utility and beauty clash in the streets of Washington, D. C., usefulness is apt to get the worst of it. For instance, no lights but those enshrined in beautiful lamp-posts are allowed to shine at night; as a result the useful traffic cop at bad corners is kept in the dark.

But the policeman at the corner of Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue is taking no chances of being run down. He stands on a platform surrounded by a sheet-iron fence painted white. At night a searchlight is focused on him from a roof.—Popular Science Monthly.

The Vamping of Mr. Dart

By DWIGHT TINGLE SCOTT

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"And all that rouge and those eyebrows and that pair of black earrings—say, girls, I don't see how Theda Bara holds her job at all."

"And do you know," interposed Miss Prentiss of the coat department, "she smokes like a chimney? Mrs. Doan just missed catching her with a cigarette in the rest room yesterday."

"And how the men hang around her desk—have you noticed it?" This from Miss Brady, the office cashier. "Even Mr. Dart, I passed his desk this morning; she had finished dictation and was sitting there talking. Heard her say, 'If you're fond of regular music, you ought to hear two new rolls I have for our piano. They're so jazzy they just make your toes tickle. And say, the big drought hasn't hit our house yet. Why don't you come over some night?' And Mr. Dart laughed and said he would be there, 'with bells on.'"

"Get that, Elsie?" called Clara Forrest of the billing department. "You'd better look after your Mr. Dart, or the new 'steneg.' will be running away with him."

Elsie Hastings bit her lip and colored to the tips of her pink ears.

"Really, girls, Mr. Dart and I are only good friends. He is free to do as he chooses."

Bravely enough pretty little Elsie said it, but there had been a cruel tugging at her heart as she watched the office vampire's bold overtures toward Phil Dart. Quite true, the status of Elsie and Phil had been only that of good friends, but Phil had been coming to see her every week for the last six months.

He was fond of music—the light classics, which Elsie played so well. Their tastes were alike in books and pictures. Without a word passing, Elsie had come to feel that Phil only awaited the time when his future might be a little better assured to turn their comraderie into something more serious.

Only this week he had got'en the promotion for which he had been working. So Elsie had been looking forward with more than the usual amount of happiness to Friday night. Then came Mayme Debussy, and things changed.

How could Elsie attribute to anything but this Phil Dart's apparent abstraction that morning when he had dictated to her? Certainly his mind had been far away, for he had faltered and revised and repeated himself in a way foreign to his usual confident manner.

"Some regular fellow, that Dart person." Mayme Debussy stopped and perched languidly on the corner of Elsie's desk.

The noon whistle had sounded, but Elsie was hastening to finish a bit of work before going to the lunch room it was like a sudden challenge—this direct mention of Phil's name. Elsie felt herself color. She wanted to look Mayme squarely in the face and answer indifferently. Instead she heard herself stammering:

"Yes, Mr. Dart is nice."

"I'll say he is. You know," and Mayme smiled down at the other in a patronizing way, "I don't see why some of you girls don't go after him. But it'll take real class to get him. I think I could learn to like him pretty much myself."

The color in the other girl's face heightened quickly. "I don't think Mr. Dart is the sort who would care to have women 'go after him.'"

The new stenographer laughed mockingly. "Pshaw, you don't know much about men. They are all alike. They like to be vamped."

And Mayme Debussy slipped down from her seat and moved toward the lunch room with a superior and worldly-wise air that set Elsie to pounding the keys of her machine furiously.

Could it be that Phil Dart was like that? Before Friday night Elsie felt sure that he was. Moreover, deep in her heart she evolved a plan—a plan to beat this flashy rival at her own game.

During the few days Mayme had been in the office Elsie had studied her carefully. She had made note of her slangy talk, her vapid mannerisms.

As a first step, Elsie called at the store where she had just bought a simple little evening gown. Think it too extreme at the neck, she ordered it altered. This alteration she canceled. Next she went up to the top floor.

Here, to the jangling of a thin-toned piano, a young man, through a megaphone, improvised from sheet music, proclaimed in syncopated measure:

Just take it from me,
Just take it from me,
You can't shimmy all night,
On a cup of tea.

This musical gem and others of a like nature she bought, and when she left the store she had also acquired a lip stick, an eye pencil and, to these, she added a package of cigarettes.

"Come right in, Phil," Elsie gushed as she met him at the door. "I have got some of the swellest new music—you'll just love it to death."

Perplexed, Phil followed into the parlor, to encounter the scent of smoke. Elsie's brother had followed instructions. The room reeked of cigarettes. Deliberately Elsie took a half-smoked cigarette from off the keyboard and tossed it into the fire, slipping the partly-used package into the bodice of her dress.

Vivaciously she ran through the music, dispersing the interludes with slangy comment, thanks, too, to her brother's coaching. On and on she prattled, but Phil Dart's usual quiet mood became ominous. Suddenly it dawned upon Elsie. It was still the other woman—the real vampire—he did not care for this pitiful little imitation. She had failed. Oh, the bitterness of it—to lose him to such a woman. Oh, the awfulness of her trying to hold him in this shameless manner—and still failing.

She could not help it; her face went down into her hands.

"Elsie, you are crying." He was at her side.

Sobbingly she blurted out the whole thing.

"Why, you dear, silly, little goose," he said quite softly, "don't you know men don't love women of that type? They do attract us—just as a poster printed in red ink attracts you. But you wouldn't choose the poster to bring home and hang on your wall instead of a beautiful water color, would you?"

"Now, please go up and wash that paint off your face and come right back, because there is something I wanted to say—and I just can't say it to a painted lady."

Elsie did go upstairs. She came back with a silk scarf thrown about her shoulders and her face all pink with the glow of health.

And Phil delivered his little speech. It was a pretty speech, too. And why shouldn't it be? Hadn't he been thinking about it all week, and about nothing much else? It had to do—this speech—with the month of June, and it touched on the housing problem and it discussed the relative joys to be derived from a trip on the great lakes as compared with one to Washington and down the Potomac. In all her life Elsie had never heard such a speech—no, never.

"Isn't it just too wonderful?" In the white quietness of her bed she whispered this question to a ring held close to her cool cheek. And from its point of vantage—third finger, left hand—a solitary white diamond caught a vagrant moonbeam, and in the marvelous heliography of love flashed back the answer: "Wonderful, wonderful!"

Three Possibilities

By R. RAY BAKER

(Copyright, 1913, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

His cigar tilted at an angle of 45 degrees, one leg swinging slightly in indication of contentment, Norman J. Haskell read from the front page with strong personal interest and satisfaction. Presently he folded the paper and laid it on a corner of his desk, while he leaned back in the swivel chair and meditated, and there seemed a tinge of gloating in the luster of his eyes.

His partner entered and interrupted the flow of thought.

"'Afternoon, Marvin," saluted Haskell, as the stocky figure with the boyish face drew off his gloves, and, depositing them in the crown of his brown derby, hung the latter on a hook protruding from the wall.

This ceremony, concluded, he approached the desk, rubbing his hands as though he had performed some neat business trick and was congratulating himself. Haskell shoved a nearby chair to a position at the corner of the desk on which lay the printed doings of the day. Stonewell began to seat himself, still rubbing his hands and smiling. Before he was settled, however, his hands had stopped their caressing of one another and the smile was superseded by an expression of astonishment. He was gazing at the newspaper.

"What's this, what's this?" he exclaimed with an air of wonderment. "What's this, I say? Here's a picture of the Marquis of Downsberry, together with three young women—and one of them is Evelyn, your sister. Let's see. It says 'Marquis coming to America for possibilities.' That means he's looking for an American bride, and Evelyn—can it be he's considering Evelyn?"

Haskell's smile almost seemed condescending.

"It means just that," he admitted. "Evelyn has a chance of marrying into the royal family. It's a standoff between her and those two other young ladies whose photos are grouped around the marquis. He's coming on his steam yacht and expects to arrange a series of cruises during which he will make his choice. Won't it be great, Marvin, if Evelyn wins? Just think of it, that'll make me a third hunky-dorance-in-law of the king by marriage, or something like that, won't it?"

"Hmm," was Marvin's response, as he settled himself in the chair and continued reading.

Mrs. Jerome Rodney Haskell was beaming.

"Your great opportunity has arrived, Evelyn," she said to the slim young woman perched on the window-seat. Evelyn did not beam, but her lips permitted a flashing smile to form. Was it exultation showing in the girl's countenance? Mrs. Haskell never could quite determine the meaning of an expression on her daughter's face.

Mrs. Haskell felt she had a perfect right to beam. That very day she and her daughter, with a few of the other members of their set, would leave New York on the steam yacht of the Marquis of Downsberry. It was the third and last "possibility cruise" the marquis intended making. Already he had conducted two such cruises, each

AMERICAN LEGION DANCE

Elks' Home, December 9th

Parker's Orchestra — ADMISSION ONE DOLLAR

I was standing right in the front row, directly beneath the auctioneer, when he put up for a bid a small statue of a cupid, made of plaster of paris.

He seemed to have quite a time getting a bid, and he suddenly bent down and looked right in my face and said: "Make me an offer." I immediately made a bid of 25 cents.

You can imagine how I felt when he almost yelled: "Sold for 25 cents to this gentleman right here!" And the worst of it was I didn't have the 25 cents, which I hastened to tell him, and he in turn announced it to the rest of the crowd. You can bet I didn't stay there long after that.—Exchange.

153-Year-Old Engine Runs.

The first pumping engine made for sale, which dates from 1766 and is preserved at Wednesbury, near Birmingham, England, was put to a trial under steam in preparation for the centenary celebration at Birmingham. The engine was in continuous use for more than half a century. Designed for 12 strokes to the minute, the ancient piece of machinery maintained 16 strokes to the minute at the trial.

Names, Names.

There were in the United States service during the war 53,000 Johnsons, 51,000 Smiths, 18,500 Walkers and 47,000 Williamses.

Slip on Sweaters, Seillers.

The marquis was a rather droll looking young man who, strange to relate, was not equipped with a monocle. He had a very pleasing way about him, which was only natural considering the social education he had received; and he had an appearance that went with his personality. In fact, deprive him of his title and he would still make a very attractive looking husband.

Mrs. Haskell took her beam with her on the cruise, while Evelyn continued to carry that little smile which might denote anything, but which surely must indicate happiness at being chosen one of the candidates from whom the marquis would select a bride. If she came through the "weeding-out" process as fortunately as her friends hoped she would, soon the portals of English nobility would open to receive her.

In the afternoon of the second day of the cruise Mrs. Haskell lost her beam. It was due to an incident that might have been serious had it not been for—but that is getting ahead of the story.

The party had just arisen from tea, when out of the distance came the putty-put-put-put of a gasoline motor. Diversion was welcome even on an occasion of this kind, and the men and women hurried from the dining room, thinking perhaps an airplane was about to pay them a visit.

However, it proved to be nothing more than a gasoline speedboat, which climbed out of the horizon and hurtled toward the yacht. When it was only a few yards off, one of the young men of the yachting party, who was an ardent motor enthusiast, became so interested in endeavoring to identify the strange craft that he fell over the railing and sank from sight in the water.

"Look!" cried Evelyn, seizing the marquis by the arm. "Somebody fell overboard. I'm sure it's Jimmy Reynolds, and he can't swim a stroke."

"My word!" gasped the marquis. "What's to be done? Where's Benjamin? Find Benjamin, somebody, and have him tell the captain to stop the ship!"

The marquis was conscientiously excited. He got red in the face and gurgled, and finally when no Benjamin appeared he started off himself in quest of the servant.

Meanwhile the motorboat had arrived. The young man in control in the bow had sensed trouble of some kind, and the frantic gestures of the excited persons on the yacht directed his attention to an object in the water. It was Jimmy Reynolds, who had come to the surface after the first immersion.

Without hesitation, the young man threw out the clutch, called to some one in the stern to take the wheel, leaped to the gunwale of the boat and propelled himself over the side. A few brisk strokes and he had Jimmy Reynolds by the hair.

The Marquis of Downsberry must have located his Benjamin, and Benjamin in turn must have carried his order to the captain—or else the captain acted on his own initiative. Anyhow, the yacht had stopped. The rescuer, with the rescued in tow, at once headed for the yacht and soon was on board.

"Marvin!" cried Evelyn Haskell in a bystander's ear. "It's my brother's partner."

The next day Mrs. Haskell's beam returned, only it was at least doubled in intensity—if a beam may be intense. She rushed to her daughter's room and proceeded to hug her at least five times before she announced breathlessly:

"Evelyn, you win! The marquis has picked you for his bride. Just think! You're going to wed royalty!"

Evelyn did not appear excited. She of them having as a guest of honor one of his marriage prospects.

Ruth was the last "candidate." After this third trip on the blue the marquis would make his choice, and of course an anxious world would be waiting breathlessly for his decision. It must be understood that the Haskells were one of the foremost families of America, and Evelyn Haskell was a leader of the fashionable younger set and the cause of much heart burning and heart breaking. Her mother had frowned on many of the suits for Evelyn's hand and had tolerated some of them, principally because her daughter had a propensity for getting her own way, but had always admonished the latter to wait awhile before choosing a husband, because she was confident "something worth while" was coming. Mrs. Haskell and Evelyn had made several trips abroad, ostensibly to study art, although there were some prying persons who claimed there were ulterior motives in which prospective husbands with titles were concerned. Be that as it may, Mrs. Haskell was now basking in the sunshine of "I told you so" satisfaction.

The cruise was not to be an extended one. At no time would the party be more than thirty miles from New York. In fact, the yacht was expected to travel in a circle, spending two and possibly three nights on the voyage. Various forms of entertainment were arranged, including dancing. It was intended that the marquis should have every opportunity to note the charms and likewise the flaws of the candidate for his love and lands.

was seated before a dressing table combing her hair, and she continued with the task, although she did look up and smile. Surely it must be a smile of exultation, thought Mrs. Haskell.

"Do tell," said Evelyn languidly. "That is very interesting, but, mother, will you be so kind as to send the marquis my heartfelt appreciation and inform him that he will have to make another decision in favor of one of the other 'possibilities?' Just tell him this one is an impossibility. I'm going to marry Marvin Stonewell. Royal blood is all right, but I prefer an American—some one who can do things for himself. I thought the little cruise wouldn't do any harm, and I acted as hateful as I could so the marquis wouldn't pick me for his victim."

11 Shopping Days Till Christmas

Are you interested in your own community? Would you like to see the Hilltop continue to be the BEST place in Columbus to live? Then it is up to you, dear reader to do everything in your power, personally to that end. One of the best ways to accomplish this is to patronize Hilltop business houses, first, last and all the time, whenever there is a chance to do so. Do you realize that every dollar spent with a local business firm helps just that much to make that business better, and as a merchant's business grows his accommodations to his patrons grows also?

Now, at this approaching holiday season, let's keep that in mind, and thus instead of allowing the thousands of dollars to go over town, keep them right here with our own Hilltop people, the men whom we know are interested in the welfare of the Hilltop and its people.

THE GLENWOOD CHURCH LECTURE COURSE

The second of the Glenwood Lecture Course will occur on Thursday evening, Dec. 18. This number, if possible, is claimed to be even better than the first. This means that a great treat is in store for the people of this community.

The Hon. J. Adam Bede will entertain that evening. He is a former congressman of the United States and was called the humorist of the house. He is also well known as an orator of note and declared to be of the very best. His subject will be, "The Pursuit of Happiness, or What's the Matter with the World?"

Tickets for the entire course of five numbers have been selling at $1.00. These are still on sale and may be procured from any Tri Mu or will be delivered if ordered, by calling Hilltop 3671. There are still four numbers on the course that are easily worth the price asked for the entire course. Those who have not procured tickets should do so at once. All procuring tickets will be assured entrance. The price of a single admission is 50 cents, one-half the price of an entire season ticket.

The following letter is from a well known Hilltop resident:

December 6th, 1919.

Dr. Howard Whitehead, Columbus, O.

My Dear Dr. Whitehead:

In the Hilltop Record I noticed the announcement that J. Adam Bede would appear as the next attraction of the course being given at the Glenwood M. E. Church. The Hilltop is to be congratulated for the opportunity of hearing America's greatest living humorist. As an entertainer, he is in a class by himself. Combined with his humor is much wisdom, and an evening spent with him is really worth while. I hope that all who can will avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing him when he appears at Glenwood.

Very truly yours,

H. S. BALLARD,

Mrs. John Evans entertained the following to a luncheon Thursday the 28th, in honor of Mrs. E. P. Cheno with of 125 Eldon Ave., who left Sunday for her future home Washington, C. H., Mrs. Thomas Watson and daughter Katherine, Mrs. E. B. Hooper, Mrs. E. P. Chenoweth and son Lewis.

---

My Christmas sale will begin Saturday, the 13th, and continue until everything is sold. May I again count on the kind patronage of the Hilltop people?

VIOLA BRYAN.

The Philathea Class of Glenwood Church will hold their regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs Carnahan, 2033 W. Broad St., Tuesday evening, Dec. 16th, at 7:30 o'clock. All members are urged to be present.

---

Dr. W. S. Murray, Dentist, Broad and Terrace, Hilltop 2965.

---

Mr. Ross Dhume (barber), formerly at 92½ N. High St. wishes to announce to his Hilltop friends that he is now with Bob Calland, 2281 W. Broad St.

---

We wish to thank Dr. Wykoff for his consoling words, Mr. Frank Brown, Mrs. Stephens, Mrs. Leonard, for their comforting songs; our many friends and neighbors for their kindness shown, and lovely flowers, during the sickness and death of our beloved husband and father.

Mrs. Martha Watts and family.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST CHURCH

Dr. C. R. Robbins pastor is in growing demand as a speaker and who again was absent last Sunday preaching in Dayton will occupy his own pulpit Sunday morning and night presenting subjects of great importance and inspiring interest to citizens and Christians. In addition to the two choirs the church has engaged at a good salary Mr. Knox the splendid cornetist and Mr. Loyd Bell saxaphonist. If you like to hear the best in the West end come to the Memorial Baptist Church, but neither pastor nor people seek to persuade members of other churches to unite with their church but seek to build their membership with volunteer and spirit led people. Come and see and hear and learn how easy it is for a church to get money depending upon God.

The copies of the Glenwood Soldiers' Memorial are ready for distribution. The class has been working upon this project since the latter part of September.

It is certainly all that they claim for it and more. It is richly bound and embossed, creating a good impression as one looks at it. A high grade of work can be seen in the illustrations scattered throughout the book, also stories and articles that cannot help but interest practically every one. This work was done entirely by the Tri Mu Class and is the first project of its kind to be attempted in the city. Everyone should attempt to get a copy.

It will probably be ready for distribution by December 14. Copies can be procured at the church, at the office of the Wy-Mar Tire Co., 2286 W. Broad st., or at Cussins and Hartsough's at Oakley and Broad. A number of extra copies can be had so that anyone who failed to order one in advance may be able to procure one if they go early.

DECORATING FOR CHRISTMAS

Holly Wreaths Help to Make the Home Cheerful—How to Keep the Tree Bright and Green.

It is not Christmas without a big, gorgeous, glittering Christmas tree and plenty of greens hung wherever possible.

Of course you have your tree chosen and ready for its great purpose. When it's time or cutting, invite your boy and girl friends to help, and make the bringing in of the Christmas tree a real ceremony. In England this is one of the big events for young and old.

The kind of tree to be used depends upon where you live. Red cedar, white pine, spruce, fir or hemlock are all good. To keep the tree bright and green set it in a deep bucket or box barrel, brace and fill the space between the tree and bucket or barrel with coal. Then pour in water until the receptacle is full.

Every home should be decorated at Christmas. Gather holly for wreaths make ropes of laurel, and have several bowls filled with partridge berries. Mistletoe is beautiful and can be found as a growth on the top of sweetgums, live oaks and other deciduous trees in the territory south of New Jersey, southern Indiana and Missouri, and in Oregon and northern California. Other fine plants for decorating are Christmas fern and polypody. Black alder and flex or inkberry can also be used. Every district has some special green that is adaptable for decorating. In gathering greens, never destroy the plants; cut and pick carefully and the growth will not be injured.

MIRACLE OF THE THORN STAFF

Pretty Legend of Ancient Britain That Is Often Repeated in England at Christmas Time.

It is one of the prettiest legends of ancient Britain—the old Christmas story of the thorn of Glastonbury. William of Malmesbury, the chronicler, told it hundreds of years ago in his "Antiques of Glastonbury." It is repeated often at Christmas time in England.

The legend tells how Joseph of Arimathea, was so persecuted by Pontius Pilate, because he had laid away the body of Christ in his sepulcher, that he fled to Gaul, carrying with him under a cloth of mystical white samite, the Holy Grail. In Gaul he found the Apostle Philip, preaching to the heathen, and he rested with him a few days.

One night a radiant light awakened him, and an angel bade him go to Britain and preach the glad tidings to King Arvigatrus; and, where a Christmas miracle should come to pass, there to build a church.

He and a band of followers followed the instructions of the angel, and Arvigatrus gave them the isle of Avalon, and bade them erect an altar there to the new God. It was a beautiful gift. The tiny isle lay warm in a verdant valley. Sparkling waves softly lapped its shore. Soft breezes played in its trees, and nowhere was the sky so blue as over Avalon.

When they reached the top of the hill called Weary All, Joseph planted his thorn staff he had carried with him on his long journeys over land and sea, deep into the ground, and lo it took root, and immediately there blossomed a bush of beautiful white flowers.

"This is where we will build our church," the good man said, and so, at Glastonbury Abbey—for so Avalon is known today—the thorn bushes bloom white at each Christmas time, lend their fragrance to the frosty air, and remind all who see them of the Christmas miracle.

BETHLEHEM

Cold was the earth and all the stars,
But Mary Mother smiled
Where in the manger of an inn
Lay warm the Holy Child.

The ox was host upon that night
Unto the King of all;
He gave for incense meadowy breath,
For shelter his rude stall.

Not all the cold of earth and man
Can pierce the heaven mind,
Where warm against her leaping heart
A Mother clasps Her Child.

O miracle of utmost love,
How God grew greater when
He stooped to be a helpless babe
Beside the hearts of men.

Long ages since—and still in joy,
In loneliness and tears,
We kneel unto a Little Boy
Who smiles down through the years.
—Wilbur Underwood in Reedy's Mirror

MAKE SOME SAD HEART GLAD

Christmas the Time for Remembering Those Not as Fortunate as You Are.

Christmas is a sad time in some households, among the older members who miss familiar faces always associated with family gatherings—a list of missing ones which increases as the years go by. But if it is impossible to be happy one's self, it is always possible to make some one else rejoice—this is an easier task than some people imagine. So many are so foolish as to think that because they cannot give beautifully that it is not worth while to give at all. They forget that what seems very little to a person in comfortable circumstances may appear very large to those who have virtually nothing at all; while among friends a small gift, bearing some sign of thoughtfulness, is often more acceptable than a costly but ill-chosen present. This is an excellent time to go over the children's toys and select those which can be spared to go to some less fortunate little ones. Do not select only those which are too battered to be recognizable; such, of course, are not to be despised, but a little glue and a few stitches to freshen up a broken doll or torn book add much to the pleasure of a second-hand gift—for all children love fresh-looking things and it is, besides, scarcely generous to give away only such articles as would otherwise be thrown in the ashes.

MAKING THE CHRISTMAS LIST

Rack Your Brain, Count 'Em Again, to See That No One's Missed.

"There, of course, is Aunt Marta, Aunt Lizzie and Aunt Jane; they're pretty old, but have to go down on the list again; and Uncle Joe and Uncle Pete and good old Uncle Lem; I wish I really could decide just what I should give them. And Cousin Nell and Cousin Kate and Cousins Belle and Sue, and Cousin May and Cousin Madge must be remembered, too. And Cousin Sam and Cousin Bill, and Cousins Jack and Ned—I'm sure if I had any more I would go off my head.

"There's Grandma Smith and Grandpa Smith, Grandma and Grandpa Jones—what shall I get for folks who have rheumatics in their bones? There's pa and ma and Brother Hal, and Sisters Maud and Grace; before I get through I think I'll be in the crazy place. Now what can I give all the girls who always give to me? Gladys, Hannah and Hortense and Lulu—let me see, and Clementine and Rose and Pearl and half a dozen more—my gracious, I must make a trip through every shop and store.

And there is Frieda, housemaid girl, and Mary Ann, the cook—ere I forget I'll put their names right down now in my book. And, Oh! what shall I give to Will? Tee hee, what shall it be? I feel sure that a diamond ring he will present to me. He says he only wants a kiss, and maybe that is so, but how to hang it on a tree there is no way I know. A nice silk four-in-hand might do, with stripes of green and white; I know he wouldn't be like pa and say it was a fright.

"And now I think I'll go to bed and put aside my list; tomorrow I am sure to think of some one I have missed. I will be bankrupt when I buy the things from ties to muff—yes, Christmas comes but once a year, and, gracious! that's enough."—Brooklyn Standard Union.

TO TRIM A CHRISTMAS TREE

Pretty Trimmings and Decorations Can Be Made in Almost Any Home at Slight Expense.

As to trimming the Christmas tree, first of all, don't trim your tree with cotton batting and lighted candles, as there is always danger in this combination, and "safety first" should be the slogan in all Christmas festivities.

You can purchase a whole lot of pretty decorations for your tree at the shops, and these come very cheaply, too. But almost any home can furnish the decorations for a really lovely tree without very much expense, and there is no reason why every family where there are children should not have their Christmas tree.

Strings of popcorn and red cranberries looped from the branches make an effective decoration. And strings of yellow field corn gleam beautifully in the Christmas light. Crescents, stars and hearts cut from heavy cardboard and covered with silver and gilt, or even colored paper, and cornucopias of bright colors filled with candy and popcorn are very pretty. Form cotton batting into balls the size of an orange and cover with orange-colored crepe paper, twist tightly and tie to the tree with a bit of narrow ribbon. These are pretty on the tree and look like oranges.

It is best to place all the larger packages under the tree, tying only the smaller gifts which are tied up in bright-colored paper to the branches. In this way the tree will not look frayed and denuded when the gifts are distributed, and it may be kept a long time for the children to enjoy.

NEEDLESS PRECAUTION.

Hubby—It's all rot and nonsense to try to make children believe there's such a character as Santa Claus. They ought to be taught better.

Wifey—Our children don't need to be taught better. They know there's no Santa Claus in this house.

PRETTY LEGEND OF CHRIST

Old-Folk Tale Relates That Stars Danced and Birds Sang on Day of His Birth.

When the child of Nazareth was born the sun, according to the Bosnian legend, "leaped in the heavens and the stars around it danced. A peace came over mountain and forest. Even the rotten stump stood straight and healthy on the green hillside. The grass was bellowered with open blossoms, incense sweet as myrrh pervaded upland and forest, birds sang on the mountain top and all gave thanks to the great God."

It is naught but an old-folk tale, but it has truth hidden at its heart, for a strange, subtle force, a spirit of genial good will, a new-born kindness, seem to animate child and man alike when the world pays its tribute to the "heaven-sent youngling," as the poet, Drummond, calls the infant Christ.

When the three wise men rode from the east into the west on their saddle-bows were three caskets filled with gold and frankincense and myrrh, to be laid at the feet of the manger cradled babe of Bethlehem. Beginning with this old, old journey the spirit of giving crept into the world's heart. As the magi came bearing gifts, so do we also; gifts that relieve want, gifts that are sweet and fragrant with friendship, gifts that breathe love, gifts that mean service, gifts inspired still by the star that shone over the City of David 2,000 years ago.

Then hang the green coronet of the Christmas tree with glittering baubles and jewels of flame; heap offerings on its emerald branches; bring Yule logs to the firing; deck the house with holly and mistletoe,

"And all the bells on earth shall ring
On Christmas day in the morning."
—Kate Douglas Wiggin.

THE CURIOUS MISTLETOE

Something Like 300 Varieties in the World—Pink Berries Found Only on Cedar Trees.

There are about 300 kinds of mistletoe in the world, and each variety grows on the branches of trees and has little white or pink berries, says St. Nicholas. But the pink berries are found on only the cedar trees. The mistletoe, unlike other plants, gets no food directly from the ground. Instead, it gets its nourishment from the trees on which it grows.

Another curious thing about the mistletoe is that though it blossoms earlier in the year than the tree on which it grows, yet the little berries do not ripen before December. Maybe that is because it has to steal its food from the trees, and therefore cannot ripen early. The very name "mistletoe" gives some idea of its insignificance. In the Anglo-Saxon language "mist" means gloom, and it comes in mid-winter, the gloomiest time of the year.

The gathering of mistletoe was a very important ceremony among the ancient Druids. About five days after the new moon they marched in stately procession to the forest and raised an altar of straw beneath the finest mistletoe-bearing oak they could find. The arch-Druid would ascend the oak, and, with a jeweled knife, remove the sacred mistletoe. The others stood beneath the tree and caught the plant upon a white cloth, for, if a portion of it touched the earth, it was an omen of misfortune to the land.

And this is doubtless the reason why it is still the custom to hang it from the ceiling and why it is supposed to lose its charm if it touches the floor.

THE CHRIST CH'LD

Across the snow the home lights glow
From the myriad hearts alight,
And through the street with noiseless feet
The Christ-child walks tonight.

At silent gates, outside He waits,
To find a fitting spot.
Be thine the shame, if through thy blame
The Christ-child enters not.

Where joyous notes from children's throats
The old glad song begin,
Where love impels and kindness dwells,
The Christ-child enters in.

Where hate has room, pride sits in gloom,
And wrong invokes unrest,
Though green the walls and bright the halls
He cannot be a guest.

But where the thought that angels brought
To earth's enraptured ears
Good will to men and peace, again
The Christ-child, listening, hears.

He turns His feet with welcome sweet,
Enters, and there abides.
Angels know best how such are blest
Through all the Christmastides.

Dad's Wide Acquaintance.

An Erie man took his nine-year-old daughter along with him to K. C. the other day. After arriving at the Union station they started uptown and, when about two blocks from the depot, this Erie man said to his daughter:

"Hold my suitcase, dear there's a man in here I know."

They walked past three more buildings and again it was, "Hold my suitcase, dear, there's a man in here I know." And then they walked on to the corner and dad once more said:

"Hold my suitcase, dear, there's a man in here I know." When he came from the building this time the nine-year-old Erie girl looked up in her father's face and said:

"Dad, you must know nearly everybody in Kansas City."—Erie Record.

NEWS HAPPENINGS

That Have Taken Place on the Hilltop During the Past Week

Mrs. Sarah Kobelsperger, 70, widow of Andrew Kobelsperger, died of complications Saturday at her home, 2388 Apple St. Her husband was killed a year ago in an automobile accident. She leaves three daughters, one sister, and four brothers. Funeral was held Monday afternoon at Schoedinger's chapel, E. State St., at Fifth St. Burial in Green Lawn Cemetery.

The body of Mrs. Nora Butler, 54, of Zanesville, O., who died of complications Saturday at Mercy Hospital was sent to her home in Zanesville by the Schoedinger Co.

Infant Brown, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Brown, died Sunday at the home of his parents, 21 Clarendon Ave. Burial in Calvary Cemetery Monday.

Mrs. Lillian Fox, 61, died of complications Sunday at Home for Aged, conducted by Mrs. Catherine Clouser. 23 Midland Ave. She leaves three sons and two daughters. Funeral at 2 p. m. Tuesday at the McNamara chapel, 856 N. High St. Burial in Union Cemetery.

Miss Louise McMurray of 180 S. Harrison entertained several of her young friends last Wednesday evening Dec. 10, in honor of her 13th birthday. The evening was spent in playing games and contests. Those carrying off the prizes were Miss Roma Day, Mildred Bower, Lucy Binderbasen and Vera Raether. Dainty refreshments were served.

Those present were Vera Raether, Roma Day, Mildred Bower, Margaret Anderson, Elizabeth Raether, Margaret Jones, Eleanor Otten, Harriett Lourie, Betty Munyon, Lucy Binderbasen, Mary Parrish and Julia Armstrong. Quite a pleasant evening was spent by all and they left at a late hour wishing Miss Louise many happy returns of the day.

At the home of the officiating minister, Rev. H. E. Cowley, Mr. Edwin St. Clair Merrit and Miss Elmyra L. Morgan, were united in marriage, Friday, Dec. 12 at 3 p. m. The beautiful short ring ceremony was used. The bride and bridegroom were accompanied by the bride's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Bert Morgan. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Merrit left for a trip to the southern part of the state.

Additional relief for congested West side schools was assured by School Board Monday night in accepting a proposition for the purchase of four lots just north of West Broad Street School.

The property, on which it is planned to build an addition of possibly eight rooms to the Broad Street School, is being purchased through D. B. Ong. It is the fifth site definitely secured since the board started on its new building program.

The West Broad Street School, now filled to overflowing with elementary pupils, is in a fast growing community and a new building there is considered among the first needs of the elementary system.

Publisher Hilltop Record:

We read of many freaks of nature in animals, but I never have heard much of many freaks in the fowl family. I have in my possession a young bantam hen about five months old with double wings. Somewhat of a freak in the fowl family. The extra wings extend from its thigh and about midway down to its feet.

TO-NIGHT

The second of the Glenwood Lecture Course will occur on Thursday evening, Dec. 18. This number, if possible, is claimed to be even better than the first. This means that a great treat is in store for the people of this community.

The Hon. J. Adam Bede will entertain that evening. He is a former congressman of the United States and was called the humorist of the house. He is also well known as an orator of note and declared to be of the very best. His subject will be, "The Pursuit of Happiness, or What's the Matter with the World?"

The Store of a Thousand Wonders

A jewelry store is a woman's "Jewel Case"—her Treasure Trove of precious things. Naturally enough, women have one favorite store and it's more than apt to be a jewelry store.

For the average woman is a wise investor. She buys because of intrinsic value. You seldom "fool her." Cut glass, watches, silverware, jewelry of all kinds—rings, diamonds—these articles not only help make life worth living—but they represent a wise money investment.

And how many beautiful and wonderful things you will find in this store—the things that bring happiness and pride and comfort.

It is the gift shop ideal.

Come and see, among many other novelties, the famous line of W. W. W. Gem Set Guaranteed Rings. In design, they are up-to-the-moment and in craftsmanship—perfect. That is why the manufacturer tells us to emphasize the guarantee.

Haven't Yet Decided What to Give?

As there are only five more shopping days left we offer herewith a page of timely suggestions. These will enable you to decide quickly and wisely. Furniture is the logical Christmas gift, because, while one member of the family may be the single recipient, all can enjoy it, and it is a constant reminder of the friendship of the giver for years and years afterwards. If you haven't all the ready money for the article you wish, our easy payment plan will afford the means of gratifying your desire. Come in, look over our stock, and let's talk over this gift proposition. We believe we can help you decide.

Hilltop Record

The copies of the Glenwood Soldiers' Memorial are ready for distribution. The class has been working upon this project since the latter part of September.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. White, 168 S. Warren Ave. will leave about Jan. 1, 1920 for St. Augusta, Fla., and other points in the South. They will remain during the winter months.

Pockets for Bosse

Christmas All the Year!

Every time that Christmas comes around again we wonder why we haven't cultivated the Christmas spirit all the year.

A SEASONABLE SERMONETTE

C Cheerfulness is a personal possession, but you can
H Hand some of it on to those whose weary, drab lives
R Represent naught but a grim struggle to exist, whose
I Inheritance is labour and sorrow —stranger to joy.
S So, in kindly spirit, go forth, seek, and find some of T These joyless ones. Bring some cheer into their lives.
M Make it a Christmas resolve that you will, out of your
A Abundance or sufficiency, make, with kindly heart, the S Sun to shine at Christmas in one poor home at least.

D Do this, and the deed shall bring you such sweet joy
A And satisfaction that the remembrance of it will make Y Your own Christmas a "happy" one in deed and in truth.

YULETIDE.

Daughter—Say, pa, what do you want me to get you for Christmas?
Pa Close—Well, if it's all the same to you, I'll just keep the money.

Christmas is not just a day of tree-trimming and toy-giving for the kiddies not just a holiday for youngsters to outgrow. Its spirit is of the heart, the soul communing between us and all those whom we hold dearly as our friends. It changes not, however we may. May its glow be reflected for you through all the coming year.

LESSON OF CHRISTMAS DAY

Example of Christ Should Inspire Unselfishness and Make Us Try to Remedy Faults.

Christmas should inspire a world of unselfishness. The example before us is almost too perfect, for it rather frightens us to attempt such divine heights of self-abnegation, but we can try. It will at least take us from the depths of selfishness, where most of us now are. Each Christmas day should teach us something of the lesson of the Holy Child's life.

If we could learn from Christmas, today and in the succeeding years the serious lessons of self-betterment and ennoblement it has to offer, how infinitely better it would be than just to look on it as a holiday for gifts and feasts, for extravagance and foolishness.

So take an hour or two off on Christmas day and give it up to retrospective and self-inspection. You will each find faults, if you judge yourself impartially, for no one is perfect. Then make a serious determination to try to overcome those faults, for only trying to improve is there any growth in character. If you are satisfied with yourself you stay just as you are with all your faults and virtues. But if you try hard to remedy the faults your character is constantly growing broader. This is the lesson which Christmas day has for each of you.

CHRISTMAS

Sparkling snow on the ground an invigorating tang to the air—the mouth-watering smell of cooking from the cozily-warm kitchen—our boy safely home from overseas with brave stories to tell and all the manhood crystallized in him—relatives and old friends gathering at the festive table—holly wreaths at the windows and a crackling fire in the open hearth—the hilarious laughter of kiddies as the new toys make them bubble over—mistletoe nailed mischievously above the door for the kiss you mean to give bustling, unsuspicious mother—the silvery, tranquil peal of church bells across the soft-snowed open places—an amazing forgetfulness of the dour anticipations and business worries of only yesterday—a sudden re-belief that love is life—

That is Christmas!

THE BIRDS' CHRISTMAS TREE.

To make a birds' Christmas tree, take an evergreen, if possible, but any kind of tree will do if you tie sheaves of wheat, corn-stalks and evergreen branches all over it to make it dense. If it is a large tree, plant it securely in a partially protected place. A smaller tree can be put on the feeding shelf outside your window. Hang on it wire baskets filled with suet, boxes with fronts removed, containing nut meats, millet, sunflower-seeds, wheat, cracked corn, breadcrumbs, rolled oats, etc. Coconut shells cut in half and filled with dainties that the birds love can also be hung from the branches. Have several shelves on which place apples, lettuce, cabbage and vegetables.

In all cold districts, have at least one or two deep boxes almost filled with cotton where the half-frozen birds can find shelter and warmth. Many birds suffer from thirst during the winter. Heat a brick or large stone and place a pan of water on it.

The Real Christmas.

The real Christmas is an invisible presence, a joyful glance of the eye, a wonderful expansion of the heart, a sense of comradeship with all mankind. It is an abandonment of ourselves to all good impulses and an almost reckless waste of good feeling and generosity and love, and no army of pessimists can banish that kind of Christmas from our hearts.

USE OF EVERGREENS.

The use of evergreens at Christmas time is older than the Christmas tree. The Christians seeming to have copied it from their pagan ancestors. In a very old book we find this reference to the use of evergreens at Christmas time: "Against the feast of Christmas every man's house, as also their parish churches, were decked with holme, ivy, bayes, and whatsoever the season of the year afforded to be green. The conduits and standards of the streets were likewise garnished; among which I read that in the year 1414, by tempest of thunder and lightning, toward the morning of Candlemas day, at the Leadenhall, in Cornhill, a standard of tree, being set up in the midst of the pavement, fast in the ground, nailed full of holme and ivy, for disport of Christmas to the people, was torn up and cast down by the malignant spirit (as was thought), and the stones of the pavement all about were cast in the streets and into divers houses, so that the people were sore aghast at the great tempest."

HYMN FOR CHRISTMAS.

Oh! lovely voices of the sky
Which hymned the Savior's birth,
Are ye not singing still on high,
Ye that sang 'Peace on earth!"
To us yet speak the strains
Wherewith in time gone by Ye blessed the Syrian swains,
Oh! voices of the sky!

Oh! clear and shining light whose beams
That hour heaven's glory shed,
Around the palms and o'er the streams,
And on the shepherd's head.
Be near, through life and death,
As in that holiest night
Of hope and joy and faith—
Oh! clear and shining light!
—Felicia Hemans.

A Rather Vague Order.

A Wisconsin boy wrote to Santa Claus as follows: "I would like a air rifle, a pair of Indinploves a mouth organ a christmus tree and some candy and nuts that is all a game of checkers for." It's a little vague, but we hope Santa will be able to fill the order.

... MY CHRISTMAS TREE.

O n Christ mas morning when I wake and sleep-dust from my eyes I shake, I see a sight that makes me start and causes thumpings in my heart, A Christmas tree—oh, pretty sight—with candles, bells and balls alight
With horns and dolls and sugar plums, and skates and trains and beating drums. And, oh, it is a wonder tree, with heaps of things for me to see. Rare gifts hang upon the side, which tinseled fairies cannot hide. A soldier doll, a doll house, too, and strings of gold come to my view, and as I look
I seem to hear sweet Christmas music, soft and clear.
A merry Christmas, it seems to say,
A merry, happy, holy day!

Squaring Himself.

Last Christmas a young man was invited to dinner at the house of one of the leading men in the town. At the dinner table he was placed opposite a goose.

The lady of the house was seated on the young man's left. Seeing the goose, he remarked:

"Shall I sit so close to the goose?"

Finding his words a bit equivocal, he turned round to the lady and said, in a most inoffensive tone:

"Excuse me, Mrs. Blank, I meant the roast one."

Christmas Thanks.

For little children everywhere
A joyous season still we make,
And bring our precious gifts to them
Even for the dear child Jesus' sake.
—Cary.

Under the Holly Bough.

Ye who have scorned each other,
Or injured friend or brother,
In this fast-fading year;
Ye who, by word or deed,
Have made a kind heart bleed,
Come gather here!

Let sinned against and sinning
Forget their strife's beginning,
And join in friendship now
Be links no longer broken,
Be sweet forgiveness spoken
Under the holly bough

CHRISTMAS FACTS IN BRIEF

Day Celebrated as Christian Festival for Centuries—Holly Once a Sacred Plant.

Christmas day is the anniversary of the birth of Christ, and has been celebrated as a Christian festival for several centuries. The Christmastide lasts from the 25th of December to the 6th of January, the twelfth day after Christ's nativity.

The origin of the Christmas tree is obscure; the thought of Christ as the Light of the World and the Tree of Life may have given rise to the light-bearing tree, or the popular old belief that every Christmas eve, trees blossomed and bore fruit, may have been the foundation of the custom.

Gift-giving is, of course, the echo of the Wise Men's gifts; and mince pie, turkey and plum puddings are modern relics of the pagan feasts. Santa Claus, known to every child in every land in this old world is the personification of the spirit of loving and giving.

The holly, synonymous of Christmas, was a sacred plant, and the mistletoe a mysterious plant, supposed by the ancient Druids to have some mystic power of healing and preventing misfortune. It was never allowed to touch the ground, hence the modern superstition that it is unlucky for a mistletoe bough to fall from its place. It was dedicated to the Goddess of Love, which explains the custom of kissing under the mistletoe.

WHERE SANTA WAS BORN

Russian Legend of Saint Klaus and How He Came to Be Known as the Children's Friend.

Very many years ago there lived in Russia a nobleman and his wife, who had a little son named Klaus. He was such a good boy that everyone used to call him Saint Klaus. In course of time his parents died and left him a large fortune, not the least part of which was three large bars of gold.

Saint Klaus one day happened to be passing a house, and overheard a father telling his daughters that he had lost all his money, and that he didn't even know how he was going to buy food for them. This worried Saint Klaus very much and he wondered how he could help them. So that night he took one of the bars of gold and threw it through the window. The next night he threw the second bar, and crept quietly away, but on the third night when he was about to throw the third bar, the man who had lost all his money came out and caught him. He tried to thank Saint Klaus for his goodness to him and his daughters, but Saint Klaus told him to pay his thanks to God, whose servant he was.

And there, boys and girls, you have the story of Saint Klaus (or Santa Claus as we call him).

PRECIOUS MOMENTS WASTED.

Mrs. Simm—They're not going to have the Christmas tree at the church tonight. Not till next Friday night, Jimmie!

Jimmie—Gosh! Will I have to wash me hands agin nex' week, too?

Christmas is the poker that rakes the dull ashes of the past and brings smoldering memories and resolves to light for the warmth of man throughout the year that follows. It is modern civilization's greatest involuntary stimulant.

Real Christmas Joy.

For somehow, not only for Christmas, but all the long years through,
The joy that you give to others is the joy that comes back to you

Mr. Ellis Jones of Camp Chase, who has been quite ill, is reported some better at this time.

A thrilling western serial which will be shown at the Empire Hilltop Theater. This serial will be shown in addition to a feature.

A CONVENIENCE.

"So you think the Santa Claus myth is a good thing?"

"Yes, it's a great convenience to have some imaginary person to take the responsibility when the children are disappointed Christmas morning."

A Christmas "Suppose."

We would not change the children's Christmas. But suppose all the grown-up people were to say to one another: "This year, instead of my giving you a present and your giving me a present, let us club together and give our present to some poor child who will not have any Christmas. There are hundreds of them somewhere. Or, if we do not know of such a child, let us give our present to a hospital for children, a home for crippled children, for incurables, for the aged, the blind, the feeble-minded." This to be, of course, in addition to what we usually give to charities at this season. Why could we not try this as an experiment, and see what the result would be?—Christian Register.

sin a line of marriageable girls is born. The girls are all drawn up in one line and the men in another, with the parents of both behind them. If a young man likes the look of any particular girl he steps out of his line, goes up to her and enters into conversation. If he is favorably received by the girl, his parents and her parents compare notes as to the marriage settlement and similar practical matters.

Many quaint superstitions are associated with the festive season in various parts of Britain. In Hertfordshire the wearing of new shoes on Christmas day is considered to be very unlucky; while in other parts it is thought to be inviting ill luck to allow any new leather in the house during the whole of Christmas week. Some folk say that "a green Christmas makes a fat churchyard," but in Devonshire they say that a green Christmas makes a prosperous year.

Superstitious people assert that one should be careful about the choice of the holly for the decorations. Part should be smooth and part prickly. Then, providing both kinds are carried into the house at the same time, all will be well. But should the prickly variety be taken in first, then the husband will rule the household during the coming year; if the smooth is brought in first the wife will be "top dog."

A BELL.

Had I the power
To cast a bell that should from some grand tower,
At the first Christmas hour,
Outring,
And fling
A jubilant message wide,
The forged metals should be thus allied:
Not iron of pride,
But soft humility, and rich-veined hope
Cleft from a sunny slope;
And there should be
White charity,
And silvery love, that knows not doubt nor fear,
To make the peal more clear;
And then to firmly fix the fine alloy,
It should be joy
—Clinton Scollard.

THERE'S A SONG IN THE AIR

There's a song in the air!
There's a star in the sky!
There's a mother's deep prayer,
And a baby's low cry!
And the star rains its fire
While the beautiful sing,
For the manger of Bethlehem
Cradles a king!

There's a tumult of joy
O'er the wonderful birth,
For the Virgin's sweet boy
Is the Lord of the earth.
Aye! the star rains its fire
While the beautiful sing,
For the manger of Bethlehem
Cradles a king!

In the light of that star
Lie the ages impearled,
And that song from afar
Has swept o'er the world.
Every hearth is aflame,
And the beautiful sing
In the homes of the nations
That Jesus is King!

We rejoice in the light,
And we echo the song
That comes down through the night
From the heavenly throng.
Aye! we shout to the lovely
Evangel they bring.
And we greet in his cradle
Our Savior and King.
—Josiah G. Holland.

Some Christmas Love Superstitions, Customs and Practices in the Old World

PURSES FOR POOR BRIDES

Money Collected and Presented in a Way So as Not to Offend Girls—Flowers Used in Proposals by Shy Young Natives of Alps.

Good St. Thomas, serve me right
And send me my true love tonight,
That I may gaze upon his face,
Then him in my fond arms embrace.

After placing a piece of holly under her pillow, many a girl, in the north of England especially, repeats these lines to herself before retiring to rest on Christmas eve, according to a writer in London Tit-Bits.

Cupid plays an important part in many of the superstitions and customs that are still extant at this season.

Another queer custom in the north although it is not now so prevalent as it was, is that of gathering maidens' purses. The money for these purses is collected some weeks before Christmas from the inhabitants of the mining towns, and they are given as marriage portions to the poorest among those girls who are soon to be married. On Christmas eve a full purse is quietly thrown in at the girl's window, so that her feelings shall not be wounded by an ostentatious distribution.

A Christmas practice among superstitious girls who wish to dream about their future lovers is that of abstaining from food or drink or speech during the whole of Christmas eve. Then after all the family have retired, they make a cake of flour, salt and water called a "dumb cake." This they eat just before retiring to bed, in the belief that their somewhat indigestible supper will cause them to dream of their future husbands.

In the Alps there exist several charming Yuletide customs of proposing marriage by the language of flowers. If a girl accepts a bouquet of edelweiss from a man during the period from Christmas day to New Year's eve the action denotes that she accepts him as her future husband.

Another Christmas custom in Switzerland is for the young man to place a flower pot containing a single rose, and a note on the window sill of the girl's room when she is absent from home. He then waits for a reply. If the maid accepts the flower before New Year's eve, then the young man boldly enters the house to "ask papa." If, on the other hand, the rose is not touched but is allowed to fade away, the proposal is rejected without a single word of love having been exchanged between the couple. This is a useful custom for bashful bachelors!

In Sardinia Christmas wooing is far more complicated. If a Sardinian father has a marriageable daughter, the would-be suitor applies to him for permission to speak to her by means of a species of telephone that has been in use for the purpose for centuries at Christmases.

It is a long string with a wooden knob at each end. The girl drops one knob out of her window and, the shutters being closed, places the other knob to her ear. Down below her would-be lover pours words of undying devotion into his knob!

On every New Year's day in Roumania a tour of marriageable girls is born. The girls are all drawn up in one line and the men in another, with the parents of both behind them. If a young man likes the look of any particular girl he steps out of his line, goes up to her and enters into conversation. If he is favorably received by the girl, his parents and her parents compare notes as to the marriage settlement and similar practical matters.

The regular meeting of the Glenwood Home Missionary Society will be held at the church, Thursday, Dec. 18th. This will be an all-day meeting. Soup will be sold, a comfort tied and a box packed to be sent to a minister and family in Oklahoma. Mrs. Eldon Smith is chairman of the committee.

TO-NIGHT

The second of the Glenwood Lecture Course will occur on Thursday evening, Dec. 18. This number, if possible, is claimed to be even better than the first. This means that a great treat is in store for the people of this community.

The Hon. J. Adam Bede will entertain that evening. He is a former congressman of the United States and was called the humorist of the house. He is also well known as an orator of note and declared to be of the very best. His subject will be, "The Pursuit of Happiness, or What's the Matter with the World?"

Tickets for the entire course of five numbers have been selling at $1.00. These are still on sale and may be procured from any Tri Mu or will be delivered if ordered, by calling Hilltop 3671. There are still four numbers on the course that are easily worth the price asked for the entire course. Those who have not procured tickets should do so at once. All procuring tickets will be assured entrance. The price of a single admission is 50 cents, one-half the price of an entire season ticket.

ANCIENT CHRISTMAS TOYS

Dolls That Delighted Children of Rome and Greece in Early Days Recently Excavated.

Rag dolls are as old as the hills and so are dolls with movable arms and legs, toy dogs, rocking horses and a host of other things that bring delight to the children on Christmas morning.

Recent excavations in the ruins of ancient Rome, Greece and Egypt have placed the British museum in possession of an interesting assortment of these relics of early Christian days, some of which may possibly have been given to the children of the followers of Christ at a time when the observation of Christmas day was an innovation.

In the nursery of a newly excavated house at Behnesa, Egypt, a fairly well preserved rag doll was found with arms and legs still intact and painted face. The doll is by no means a beauty and does not compare with the Christmas dolls of today, but nevertheless it must have brought joy to a little girl's heart nearly 2,000 years ago.

The jointed dolls of long ago were made to sit down, stand up and move their arms, but they didn't close their eyes or squeak "mamma." Among the toy dogs, horses and donkeys are some made of stone and baked clay and others carved out of wood.

Touched His Heart, Not Purse.

A very ragged individual invaded the office of a millionaire one Christmas eve and started describing his woes and sorrows in so graphic a manner that the millionaire was more affected than he had ever been before in his life.

At last, with tears in his eyes, he rang the bell for his servant, and when the latter arrived, said to him in a broken voice: "John, put this poor fellow out at once. He's breaking my heart."

Their Annual Resolve.

Probably the girls are saying the same thing this year that they have said every year in the past: "Well, I'm going to start making presents right away for next Christmas."

Vol. 3. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, December 24, 1919 No. 3[illegible]

NEWS HAPPENINGS

That Have Taken Place on the Hilltop During the Past Week

Mr. Raymond C. Grant and Miss Olevira E. White, were united in marriage on Wednesday evening, December 17, 1919 by Rev. J. M. Weinrich at his residence, 129 Midland Ave. The beautiful and impressive ring ceremony was used. The sister and Mr. Sullig were the attendants.

The West Broad Basketball Team will practice at the Shelter House on Friday, from 5 to 6 o'clock. The following boys report at 4:45: Lawrence Huffman, Devella Morris, Norman Chambers, Thomas Blunt, Willard Young, Jack Merriman, Donald Mitchell, Edward Barnes and Kenneth Patten. The coach is desirous of having all of these boys report without fail as the season opens in two weeks.

Christmas.

It is a blessed thing to believe in Christmas and all that it means. It is a blessed thing to be able to hear the song of the heavenly visitors. It has never sounded sweeter; never more necessary, never more full of hope and promise.

The firemen at No. 17 Engine House were called into action Wednesday night of last week, when a 10-pound coon which had been shot by Walter Decker up in Marion county, after being unavoidably detained in the oven at Guyette's Restaurant long enough to become thoroughly roasted in the "good old Southern darkie Possum way," was rescued and hurriedly rushed across the street to the engine house. The firemen responded to the call vigorously, and with the aid of sufficient tools, gained entrance to said coon's interior by cutting away about two chapters of his anatomy, after which, without the use of gas masks, they heroically explored the interior and exterior, recovering a large quantity of mashed and sweet potatoes, gravy, etc, piping hot and well done. A stream of expressions, such as "that's some roasting," "those Guyette girls are the candy at roasting," "like mother used to roast," etc., was turned on as the whole "bunch" endeavored to "save the coon" but to no avail—his coonship was doomed to oblivion, for surely and swiftly was he gradually disapearing, although every man worked hard, without stopping, except when Will Shaw took a shot at sliding up and down the pole to provide a more adequate storage capacity. And as two of the other boys took a leap over the engine wagon for the same purpose. Finally when there was nothing left of the victim but his slats and shin bones, a second call came in where some pumpkin, and mince pies, ba ked by Mrs. T. S. Frame and some pickles and catsup, furnished by Mrs. Fleming, were threatened a like fate and only by a letting out of their belts a couple of notches, were the firemen able to save the pies "to sin no more." After a strenuous hour's work, the firemen and their friends bid each other good night and hied themselves up to the "hay" with the wishes of many returns of the ga-lorious occasion—but with guilty consciences lest they might be compelled to again look another coon in the face before morning.

Mrs. J. H. Kramer, 2354½ West Broad, received a telegram Monday morning announcing the death of her father, Mr. H. G. Keenan, at Marion, Iowa.

A CHRISTMAS WALK

In silvery softness the anthem closed
Like a slowly silenced bell
The sacred calm of a peace divine
Like a benediction fell,
And out on the morning light that spread
A glimmer of amber gray,
I walked with Margery home from church
On an old, old Christmas Day.

A bland, mild day—for the rugged month
Had chosen a kindly mood,
Like a wonderful mellow aftermath
From the Autumn's plenitude.
With scarcely a tang of wholesome cold
Did the Winter's breezes blow,
As Margery walked from church with me
On a Christmas long ago.

The earnest words that had touched our hearts
The warnings, kindly and wise—
Had left a shadow of tenderness
In Margery's violet eyes,
The merry, boyderish maid I'd known
For a twelvemonth's flying spare,
Had taken on that old Christmas Day,
A new and womanly grace.

As through the tremulous opal clouds
That shifted and swayed apart,
A sun ray lighted the rosy face,
The wish was born in my heart
That down the trail of the unspent years,
Whatever their trend might be,
The soft-eyed maiden beside me then,
Might walk to the end with me.

Absently watching the velvet flakes
On the white gale set a-wing
I breathe the spirit of other years
While the bells of Yuletide ring
And near me, smiling with happy eyes
At our children's romping play,
Is the girl who walked from church with me
On that old, sweet Christmas Day

GOD'S WAY

You plant a seed in the ground that's your part. You don't understand how it grows; how God makes it grow is mysterious to you. How God turns food to muscle and sinew is mysterious; I don't understand it. My part is to eat - that's all. Outside of the physicians and some of them may not know much about it few of us have any idea at all as to how the body assimilates food. How God saves me, I don't know that's God's part. Although God is omnipotent, he can't save you against your will. You must do as God tells you If the doctor should give you a prescription and you shouldn't use it, but should take some stuff of your own, you couldn't blame the doctor if you didn't get well. If we could fix up a little scheme of salvation of our own it would please us, but there is only one way to be saved, and that is God's way. What shall I do to be saved? Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ in your heart and confess him with your mouth, and you will be saved.—"Billy" Sunday.

WORLD'S BIGGEST NITRATE PLANT

Mammoth Explosives Factory in Alabama Built In Eight Months.

ALL SPEED RECORDS BROKEN

Could Supply 13 Per Cent of Allies' Needs Had War Continued.

By GARRET SMITH.

Lifting the ban of war secrecy has just now brought to light for the first time one of the most stupendous feats of construction in history—the planning and building in less than one year of the largest ammonium nitrate plant in the world and of a city around it for the housing of its 25,000 workmen and their families. At the same time is revealed one of the chief reasons why Germany suddenly surrendered a year ago. The German high command knew that the United States was ready at Muscle Shoals, Alabama, to manufacture 13 per cent of all the high explosives needed by all the Allied armies on all fronts in the expected drive of the following spring.

The first person on construction work reached Muscle Shoals on November 28, 1917. On February 16, 1918, ground was first broken for a permanent plant building. On October 26, 1918, eight months and eight days later, the manufacturing plant had begun the production of ammonium nitrate.

When America entered the world war in April, 1917, she had no means of producing the enormous quantities of high explosives necessary to provide the huge army she planned to raise. The very fact that our industries were already worked to capacity providing ammunition to the allies seemed to make further production for our own use impossible.

Fertilizer Process Turned to War Use

At this juncture the Ordnance Department turned to cyanamid, a commercial fertilizer, which had for some years been produced successfully at Niagara Falls, by a process the American rights of which were obtained in 1907 from Germany by Frank Sherman Washburn, head of the American Cyanamid Company.

By this process cyanamid was produced by extracting nitrogen from the air and combining it with calcium obtained from limestone rock and carbon from coke. By putting cyanamid through three more processes both ammonia and nitric acid can be extracted from it and combined into the explosive, ammonium nitrate. Mr. Washburn was invited to present plans and estimates for the construction in the shortest possible time of an ammonium nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals, Alabama, and a contract between his company and the United States was entered into under date of November 16, 1917.

To have general supervision of planning and carrying out the work an organization known as the Air Nitrates Corporation was formed to act as agent of the Ordnance Department. This corporation provided the general designs, supervised all the work and operated the camp, the town and the plant. It also installed all equipment in the chemical plant. The various other sections of the work were sublet to organizations that were specialists in the directions in which they were asked to help.

New City Built From the Ground.

It was necessary to build a new town to house the laborers. For this job Westinghouse Church Kerr Company was called in as contractor. This company also built the buildings of the chemical plant. Within four months 12,000 workmen had been assembled and a city capable of accommodating 25,000 inhabitants had been completed, with lodging, restaurants, stores, offices, police headquarters, schools, fire departments, hospitals, motion picture theaters, electric light and sewerage systems.

The construction of the plant proper was begun on February 16, 1918. Just eight months and eight days later the big plant began a steady output of ammonium nitrate. The plant contains 118 permanent buildings, with a roof area of over 26 acres.

To provide the electric current it was necessary to build a steam power electric plant, for it would have taken three years or more to complete the dam and hydro-electric station now under way. This plant, built by the J. G. White Corporation, is one of the largest steam plants for developing electrical energy in the world.

The output of the plant is 300 tons of ammonium nitrate a day, and this can be produced at Muscle Shoals at a cost less than one-half the standard fixed price paid by the Government for ammonium nitrate produced by other methods and one-fourth to one-fifth the cost of other high explosives of equal strength. Compared with the older process of making ammonium nitrate, the savings made by this plant would have paid the $00,000,000 cost of the entire plant in about one and one-half years of operation.

As a military weapon it is one of the wisest and most economical expenditures that the Ordnance Department has undertaken. As an agent in stopping the war and as a future protection to the country its value is incalculable.

Evangelistic Service at 7:30 P. M. Subject of Sermon, "Be Sure Your Sin Will Find You Out.'

How often have you neglected your responsibility to the church during this past year? God takes account of your carelessness and neglect. Come to church Sunday, get right with God, and then you can start the new year right.

A few Sundays ago the Intermediate Endeavor Society of the St. Paul United Evangelical attended the Franklin County Intermediate Endeavor Rally and brought home with them the banner for the largest attendance at the Rally. Last Sunday evening they had a Christmas Tree in connection with their regular meeting and gave gifts to each other, and a general good time was enjoyed by the large crowd present.

The meeting next Sunday evening will be of unusual interest.

If you are not attending Endeavor Meeting elsewhere why not come and attend our meeting next Sunday evening?

MEMORIAL BAPTIST CHURCH

The Rev. L. M. Darnell, District Evangelist, will occupy the pulpit morning and evening in the absence of the Pastor. Mr. Darnell is an instructive and inspiring preacher and is sure of an appreciative congregation.

Dr. Robbins and wife left early Monday morning for Cincinnati, where their daughter Edith will join them Tuesday and then all go to Chattanooga, to spend the holidays with the son Frank M. Robbins and family. The younger Mr. Robbins though only thirty-two years of age is a graduate of Denison University and the Colorado Mining School and now holds the position of Assistant Manager in one of the largest iron and steel concerns in the South, and recently was elected Vice-President of the Southern Iron and Metal Association and is considered an authority in many matters pertaining to the iron business. Dr. and Mrs. Robbins will return next week and occupy his pulpit the following Sunday and then preach each night for several weeks in revival meetings in Memorial church.

CHRISTMAS BELLS

Hark! Hark! I hear a distant bell,
And now a chime—they softly ring
What joyful tidings do they tell
As back and forth they swing

'Tis mid of night—who rings those bells?
Perhaps some doves there nestling.
And while each little bosom swells,
And warm, they touch with gentle wing
The tuneful metal, and it feels
So incubated it would sing
To life, and wake the world with peals
Of gladness as for new-crowned King.

Those midnight bells, how sweet they chime,
The welkin vibrates with their sound;
To hearts attune they are sublime,
Nor spread they dread alarm around.

Lo! now I see, from East afar
A light shines through the steeple's frame.
'Tis brighter than the brightest star,
It gilds the bells with golden flame;
There, too, I see some cherubs cling
Fast hold the ropes. How fair they be!
They swing the bells and sweetly sing
"This is the Christ's nativity."

Wake every heart, join in their song
Of praise to Christ, our new-born King;
To him our sweetest strains belong
And his, our richest offering.

When wakes the god of day and flies
Athwart the heavens, what do we Will wake as well? With box and boxes
And flowers gay, yon house will be Adorned, and while the anthem swells
With organ's voice, all Christendom
Will vibrant be as are those bells
That Christ's nativity has come

ASIA BIRTHPLACE OF ST. NICHOLAS

Contrary to General Belief in This Country, He Was Not of German Origin

BORN IN SIXTH CENTURY

Worshiped by Italian Sea Traders as Their Special Protector—Played Double Role in This Country in Early Days.

Just why so many Americans think of the good Saint Nicholas as a German saint, and on second guess accredit him with Dutch ancestry, is not known. But it is undoubtedly the general belief in our country that the saint, whose birthday, December 6, is celebrated in some countries as the "gift festival" of the year, was of Teutonic extraction.

The Christmas saint really was born in Asia Minor, in Panthera, in the province of Lycia, some time in the sixth century. St. Nicholas of Bari, he is oftenest called by Europeans, but only the bones of St. Nicholas reposing for eight centuries in the crypt of a handsome cathedral at Bari, Italy, have given him that title. He never lived in Bari. Italian sea traders, who worshiped him as their especial protector, stole his body from its resting place in Myra in the twelfth century and brought it to the Italian seaport. Since that time the celebration held there in the saint's honor is unique.

The Eastern world knew and loved him first, but it is from Western Europe that we learn of many of the quaint customs connected with the celebration of his birth. In Lycia he lived to a good old age, filling his days even in childhood by doing good deeds and giving lavishly to the poor of the fortune he inherited. It was Christlike to give, so, as a steward of God, his wealth belonged to God's children, Nicholas believed. Finally he was made bishop of Myra, where he went to live after a pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

It was not strange that after such a life of charity he should become a saint of the common people, even as St. George was a saint of knighthood. He was invoked by the laborer toiling for his daily bread, by mariners, by merchants. He was protector of the weak against the strong, the poor against the rich, the captive, the prisoner, the slave. He was especial guardian of maidens, schoolboys, the orphan poor. Throughout all Catholic Europe children are taught to reverence him, and to believe if they are docile and attentive to their duties he will fill the cap or stocking with dainties; if they are naughty or idle, he certainly has a rod in pickle to bring along for them.

Saint Nicholas has found his way to America in double role of benefactor and bugaboo. Among the Pennsylvania Dutch parents still admonish children: "Be good, Pelznickel will get you"—Pelznickel being a species of unkind Santa Claus and closely related to the "Old Nick." In some sections Kris Kringle appears in combined role of Santa Claus and Christchild. He has other names—Samiclaus, Clawes Niglo, Nikolo.

Although strangely little is known of St. Nicholas in America, a few churches scattered over the country bear his name. No saint of the calendar has as many churches, altars and chapels erected in his honor. Most towns in England boast churches bearing St. Nicholas' name. There are more than a hundred in Belgium and thousands scattered over Europe. But wherever he is worshiped and his birthday observed it is always in remembrance of the fact that he is a follower and disciple of the Christ, whose coming was the greatest gift of all.

Charity at Christmas.

There can be no holier sentiment attached to a gift on Christmas day than charity, for charity combines all that is good and tender in human ideal, impulse and emotion. There is a double joy in charity, for it blesses two. It not only gives happiness in the act itself, but it quickens and develops, for all after life, pure, precious qualities of mind and heart that are a well-spring of peace. Charity comes nearer to spanning the immeasurable space between the sin of this world and the holiness of heaven than any other blessing that mankind knows.

An ideal Christmas which would really mean genuine good will among men is one in which none should be cold, hungry, shelterless or friendless—one in which they who have would think first of them who have not.—Christian Herald.

CHRISTMAS REBORN

My heart's throbbin' like it used to, old tunes play along its strings
At the thought of Christmas comin' and the thought of Christmas things.
And the thought of little children climbin' out of little beds
With the Christmas candles throwin' golden glory on their heads,
And a-standin' like I've seen them all about the Christmas tree;
There is memories a-plenty comes along the years to me,
But no memories are sweeter than the memories that come
Of the far-off Christmas mornin's and the children with their drums.

Little children tippytoein' down the stairs in nighties white,
Then a sudden rush an' clatter, and a squealin' of delight
When they see the tree a-standin' in the crispy Christmas dawn.
And a look has made them certain that old Santa Claus is gone—
For although they write to Santa tellin what they'd like to get
They are always sort of skeered that they will find him there till yet
When they're gettin' up so early, so they give a squeal to see
That he's got his work all finished and has left the Christmas tree.

Children late years ain't been gettin' all they writ him for,
For his work was interfered with by the horrors of the war;
But the war is done and ended, and we've got to rise and go
All the gaits for this here Christmas that we ever used to know;
Got to do our shoppin' early, and enough for years gone by;
Got to bring back Santa Claus and get the Christmas tree, an' try
To forget that there was hatred in the world, an' grief and tears;
Got to do our shoppin' now and brighten up the comin' years.

—Judd Mortimer Lewis

CHRISTMAS ACTS AS TONIC

Happy and Exhilarating Mental Spirit Has Good Effect on People, Declare Medical Observers.

Close observers in the ranks of the medical profession have noted one very interesting fact concerning the Christmas season—that it generally has a good tonic effect upon their patients. In explanation of this the London Lancet says that since Christmas has come to be regarded as a time for good cheer, a universal feeling of contentment and happiness is engendered at this time of joyousness, routine is for a while relieved, a certain freshness is given to the daily round, differences of opinion are sunk, and a charitable spirit prevails. Is it, by the way, hoping for too much that the season of good fellowship should leave some lasting effect upon the manners and methods of all?

It may not be easy to trace exactly why this sense of exhilaration and well-being comes with the advent of Christmas, for the psychological factors concerned are not simple. But the main point is that the mental state does everybody good, and the annual festivity is just as excellent an institution as the prescription of the physician which gives tone and vigor to the struggle in life's race. There is no need nowadays, thanks to the good sense of the people and the counsels of their medical advisers, to moralize about the evils of a stupid indulgence in food, alcohol and tobacco on a festive occasion such as the present. Practically everybody realizes the great physiological advantages of being wise on a merry occasion and the disadvantages of being a fool.

Many more persons than formerly feel where use ends and abuse begins, and they act sensibly accordingly; and so far from it being a crime to make the season festive by enjoying, on a little extended scale perhaps, the creature comforts of life, some decided good is done to both the mental and physical health of the individual.

The festive season may, therefore, be welcomed which brings cheer to thousands, which induces the generous and charitable to brace the mental and physical functions of the community at large, giving it the opportunity of relinquishing its business and its worries for a time, to start again refreshed and ready for "the trivial round, the common task." The prescription "A Merry Christmas" is sound so long as the "signature" of good sense is observed.

SANTA BANNED BY PURITAN FATHERS

No Christmas Festivities or Gifts for Children in Massachusetts in Early Days

DAY JUST LIKE ANY OTHER

Condition Somewhat Better for Youngsters in New Amsterdam—Holiday Observance Topless in the Colonies in Seventeenth Century

In the early days of this country's history Christmas festivities were not generally observed and poor old "Santa Claus," and all he represents, had a hard time of it.

In Massachusetts the observation of Christmas was utterly denounced as an evil, ungodly and pernicious custom, and any child daring to think of as much as a plum pudding on that day would make herself liable to reproof by the authorities. All along the stern and rock-bound coast, Geraldine Ames writes in the Churchman the only Christmas trees in the days of the Puritan domination were those that nature had planted there and had adorned with fleecy snow. The fires burned brightly on the open hearths, but as far as the children knew Christmas was just like any other day in the calendar. Even after the Puritan reaction against the forms and customs of the old church had spent itself to some extent the children of the seventeenth century still expected no gifts in honor of the birth of Christ.

In New Amsterdam the outlook was a little better for the children. The Hollanders had brought with them their St. Nicholas, and his birthday was celebrated joyously by young and old just before Christmas, but Christmas was also observed. Of course, they had not many real toys as we know them today, but in the shoes that the little Hollanders set by the fireplace in the shining kitchen, which was also the living room, were homemade gifts. Many of these were of a useful character, such as hand-knit caps and mittens, but now and then a skillful Hollander would carve a model of a boat such as that which had brought them to New Amsterdam, or a miniature chest of drawers, and one can fancy the recipients showing these with pride to the wondering little Indian boys and girls when they came to be on terms of sufficient amity with them for such conferences.

In Virginia, where the church of England was strong and its adherents steadfastly observed the holidays as in the home country, there was always more of the Christmas spirit and abundant cheer and merrymaking than elsewhere at this season. Here the Yule log held its place and here were the games and the feasting that made it indeed the merry season of the year. Later when New Amsterdam became New York and the English came into power the character of the Christmas holiday was changed somewhat, although the Dutch influence continued dominant for many years.

Throughout the colonies in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries toys were an almost unknown factor, but wherever Christmas observations were not frowned upon by religion, feasting and good cheer were abundant, and bond and free, rich and poor, old and young, shared in the games, abundant food and genial atmosphere. In the eighteenth century toys began to make their appearance in the colonies. Some of them were brought from over seas and had the enchanting quality of novelty. Little girls who had helped to mother their younger brothers and sisters were delighted with dolls that were all their own, to fondle and coddle. A toy was a thing to be cherished in those days. Some of the gifts were of real intrinsic value, for the shipping and trading were growing to be important factors in the colonies, and men brought treasures of all kinds from the far East to the seaports, whence they were distributed to other parts of the colonies. The war for Independence interrupted this and the children shared in the self-sacrifices and deprivations that were undergone by all the families living in the colonies at that time. When soldiers were starving at Valley Forge there was little thought in their homes of Christmas merrymakings and little out of which to provide it.

After the war there were still lean years, but by the opening of the nineteenth century peace and plenty smiled upon the land and Santa Claus found it safe to resume his visits and make his distributions.

LORE OF THE YULE LOG

Should Be Lighted From Portion of Last Year's Which Should Be Preserved for Good Luck.

The Yule-log, a probable variant of the bonfire—so characteristic of sun festivals—has some interesting folklore of its own.

In medieval England, its duration coincided with the Christmas revels. As long as it burned, the tenant had a right to feed at the lord's expense. The log was often cut from an ash-tree—the sacred tree of our Saxon forefathers. There is a gypsy legend that our Lord was born in a field and brought up by an ash-fire.

The log should, properly, be lighted with a portion of last year's log, a piece of which is always supposed to be preserved for luck. At the same time that the Christmas fire was lit, the Christmas candle had to be lighted (A portion of last year's taper has also to be kept.) It was unlucky to snuff the Christmas candle, which burned for 12 days—the period of festivity. At St. John's college, Oxford, can still be seen the ancient stone socket with the Agnus Dei stamp, in which the Christmas candle was placed on the high table.

On the Isle of Man, the folk formerly carried long tapers to church on Christmas eve.

AND BEFORE CHRISTMAS, TOO.

"Jeanette, you are the light of my life. You're my sun, my stars, my all you're my—"

"Yes, George. I know all that; but you're broke."

The Bubble Burst.

Young Tom was spending Christmas in the country and had been invited to the beautiful home of a sweet young thing named Agnes.

"What a charming place!" he said enthusiastically, to Agnes' proud parents. "Does it go as far as those woods over there?"

"It does," remarked the somewhat unsympathetic father.

"Ah," said Tom, still cheerily; "and to that old stone wall over there, sir?"

"It does," came the gruff answer; "and it goes as far as the river on the south, and to the main road on the north."

"Beautiful!" put in Tom.

"Yes," went on the old man, "but it doesn't go with Agnes!"

Then Tom faded peacefully from view.

Stockings for Christmas Only.

The Christmas stocking as generally known is one taken from the bureau supply for daily wear. In certain parts of the country, however, the Christmas stocking is never in use except to be "hung from the chimney with care." The New England stocking of this kind is usually long in the leg and knitted from woolen yarn. There are stockings on Cape Cod which have been used by four generations of children. Once emptied of their treasure on Christmas morning they are rolled up and marked and laid away for the next year's festivities.

The Question of Importance.

Millionaire—Tell me, child, that young man who wants to marry you this Christmas, has he got any money?

Miss Innocence—Money, father? Why, he has just given me a cluster diamond ring studded with pearls.

Millionaire—Yes, I know. Has he any money left?

FOR SALE—Turkeys, chickens, geese. Call W. C. Gordon, 121 S. Terrace St., Hilltop 1782.

His First Offering

By DORA MOLLAN

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Nowadays only the coal man views with joy the first signs of winter. "One swallow does not make a summer"—nor does one velvet hat make a fall. However, the particular one purchased by Marietta Jones on her July trip to the city—"Charge it, please, and send the bill to Mr. J. Johnson Jones"—was unlucky from the start.

It delighted Marietta because it added at least two years to her age. It displeased Marietta's mother for the same reason. Marietta could stand it. She was young—very young, as Mrs. Jones often asserted. Mrs. Jones had married young—very young, she was fond of repeating. What added two years to Marietta's age must perforce have like effect upon her mother's reason enough for her disliking the hat.

J. Johnson Jones dealt in ice. Numerous wagons bearing his name peddled the chill commodity from house to house in the very same city where the velvet hat was purchased. July is the height of the ice season. Jones, pere, didn't like to be reminded of leaner days to come. Then the bill. "Outrageous! Just for a bit of puckered-up black velvet!"

Billy Jones didn't like the hat just because he was thirteen and never liked anything his sister had or did anyway.

Amy Lovell didn't like it either. But Marietta Jones didn't know that, and wouldn't have cared in the least if she had. Amy and her mother were occupying the small cottage at the extreme end of the river road that summer. Every time Marietta drove by wearing the hat Amy would sputter: "Goodness knows, we'll probably never have such a glorious vacation as this again, mummie; people aren't going to offer us a cottage for nothing every year. And it's tough to have to be reminded that fall is coming, even if it is two months off! When it snows she'll buy a straw one, I suppose!"

Billy Jones had peddled vegetables around the neighborhood during the summer of 1918, the product of his own garden. The profits had netted Billy a $50 Liberty bond. His enterprise had been encouraged by the family.

Once Marietta had confessed it to be "the thing to do." But in the summer of 1919, for some reason which was entirely beyond Billy's understanding, it was not at all "the thing to do." Only Mr. Jones ... vowed "Billy is all business," he would boast.

So when the relief of the horse of ... team, carrying a large basket of ... vegetables, halted at the side ... or of the Lovell cottage one morning simultaneously with the passing of Marietta and the hat, something on the opposite side of the road seemed to have engrossed Marietta's attention. This maneuver didn't get by Billy—nothing did. He added it to the long score he already cherished against his sister, and answered the summons to "Come in," as one well used to the premises.

Billy took the chair offered him by Mrs. Lovell. Business was good here; the Lovells being one of the few families thereabouts who had no garden of their own. Also there was Amy, two years older than Billy, and pretty. Girls of his own age bored Billy; he had many years to go to reach the maturity where they like 'em younger.

"Isn't that your sister, the girl in the black velvet hat who just drove by?" questioned Amy.

"I'm," grunted Billy; "she won't speak to me when I'm out selling things. Says it isn't the thing to do this year." Billy's mimicry was perfect.

Only a Lonely Fisherman.

"Well, I wish you would tell your sister 'it isn't the thing' to wear velvet hats in July, either, and remind one of disagreeable things to come, like the end of vacation."

"And school," added Billy gloomily.

Billy mused over Amy's words as he trudged home with empty basket and a jingling in his pocket. "Serves her right," was the conclusion he had reached when he carefully counted the morning's gains and stowed them away in a bulging canvas bag under sundry clothing in the lower drawer.

The "her" referred to was Marietta.

not Amy, as transpired that afternoon when the female part of the family had departed to a tea at the Country club. Mrs. Jones had somehow managed that a pink crepe confection should adorn her daughter's head. The maids were giving a tea in the kitchen with the new gardener next door as the guest of honor. The coast was clear.

Only a lonely fisherman, patiently watching his cork bob up and down on the ripples, saw Billy as he lifted the heavy rock, then the wooden cover from an unused well close to the lonely beach. Watched him choose a stone and place it inside a black object which he carried under one arm, tie a string around the object and drop it into the well, replace the cover and rock and walk whistling away.

The lonely fisherman, knowing Billy, was consumed with curiosity. The next morning while listening to an excited tale of the mysterious disappearance of her new velvet hat related by Marietta to his younger sister, he made a shrewd guess that the curiosity had been gratified. But he wasn't the tattling sort.

On the same morning Billy answered the usual summons and walking into Lovell's kitchen, placed a large basket of crisp vegetables on the table.

"Got string beans this morning," he announced. Mrs. Lovell departed in search of her pocketbook, which she habitually mislaid.

Billy turned to Amy. "You won't be reminded of fall any more by that lid of my sister's," he remarked; "and she won't get another right off, not if dad has to pay the bill."

"Billy Jones"—Amy looked at him with suspicious eyes—"what happened to it?"

"I could tell you—but I won't. A fellow'll do a lot for a girl he likes," was Billy's reply, uttered in a meaning voice. Amy smiled upon him sweetly.

Billy couldn't decide afterward which reward he appreciated most, Amy's sugary smile or the dollar his mother gave him when she wormed the truth out of him. But his leaning was toward the smile.

ADVICE THAT MADE DISRAELI

Irish Statesman Credited With Giving Wise Counsel to Orator Destined to Be Great.

In the first speech in the house of commons Benjamin Disraeli had not spoken more than four or five sentences when he was interrupted with loud cries of "Hear! Hear!" He paid no attention and continued his speech, which was again interrupted with cries of "Hear! Hear!" This had the effect of angering him and he raised his voice until it became a thin falsetto. This produced roars of laughter and what was intended to be a serious oration became a mere jest. Justin McCarthy, who is conceded to be a fair-minded historian, says that the effort was a fiasco. But for many minutes the new member refused to sit down and confusion became worse confounded. It was useless to go on.

One of the fair-minded members of the house who felt that he had not been given a square deal was Shiel, then one of the Irish leaders. He told his friends afterward that Disraeli was one of the coming men of England. "If ever the spirit of oratory was in a man," he said, "it is in this young man."

He took the new member aside and gave him a few words of wisdom:

"My lad, you can win, and win quickly if you will take my advice: Get rid of your genius for a while. Talk when it is necessary, but do not talk too much. Do not wait too long for your second speech because that may give them the impression that you are afraid of them, and that will never do. When you speak, speak slowly. Be quiet, be dull, give them plenty of statistics, quote heavy authorities. And presently they will sigh for the wit and eloquence which they know you possess."

It was good advice and Disraeli followed it. A week or two after his dismal failure, the new member arose again to speak on the copyright bill. He made no attempt at flights of eloquence. He spoke quietly and with force, and he gave the members information that had not been given before. It was not a brilliant speech by any means, but Disraeli had accomplished his purpose.

He was heard often after that and always with respectful attention.

Spoken With Deep Feeling.

"Travel on transatlantic air liners will be luxurious, I'm told."

"I haven't the slightest doubt of it," replied the man who has suffered more than once from seasickness. "I should think being able to get up every morning and eat a hearty breakfast would be the last word in luxurious transatlantic travel."

Doesn't Want Much.

Peg—No, I wouldn't think of marrying you, and you'll find very few girls who will.

Rupert—Ah—but I'd be perfectly satisfied with a few!—Cornell Widow.

NEWS HAPPENINGS

That Have Taken Place on the Hilltop During the Past Week

Mary Elora Rudolph, a Hilltop lady of Wynters School of Expression, will present a miscellaneous program in the M. E. Church at McArthur, O., Thursday evening, January 1st.

Ancil J. Watson, carpenter's mate, Public Works Department, Great Lakes Naval Station, is home on leave of absence for a couple of weeks.

Dr. Don. M. Griswold, Mrs. Griswold and son, Don, of Detroit, Mich., returned to their home after spending the week of Christmas with Rev. and Mrs. R. E. Shields, of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church. While here, Dr. Griswold in company with Mr. C. J. Kohn and Mr. Shields inspected the Sanitary Departments of the City of Columbus. Dr. Griswold is Director of Medical Service for the Detroit Board of Health.

Miss Alma Volp has opened her studio for piano instructions at 278 N. Warren Avenue. Miss Volp is a very brilliant pianist and a member of Mrs. Grace Hamilton Morrey's present artist class at the Morrey School of Music. Any one interested please call Hilltop 2201.

Miss Ethel Wright, of 76 Hanford Street and Miss Rebecca Jane Hutt, of 2323 W. Broad Street are among the guests at the house party given by Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Wright, of 83 E. Elm Street, Chicago.

The wounded Yanks at the Columbus Barracks Hospital were well remembered by a number of Hilltop ladies, who sent each of the 27 boys a box of home-made candies, cake, and fruit. They extend their thanks and appreciation through Mrs. E. R. Vanmeter, who visits them. One wounded boy was quite happy when he learned of some friends on the Hilltop whose parents' home in Ireland was within 30 miles of his home, so he does not feel alone in Old Columbus Town.

Dr. W. S. Murray, who spent Christmas week with h family at Athens, O., returned the first of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Juengst, of Cleveland, visited their parents Christmas week, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Barnes and Mr. and Mrs. Juengst, 21 N. Eureka Avenue.

When Commodore Decatur, With a Few American Ships, Put End to Ransoms Paid Algiers.

Commodore Stephen Decatur, with a small squadron of American ships, in two months did more than all the powers of Europe dared to do in the Mediterranean sea. He defied the bey of Algiers, defeated his armies, and liberated the United States from the need of paying annual tribute to that pirate, who had the habit of capturing American seamen and makin slaves of them. The bey received tribute constantly between 1785 and 1812. In 1793 Washington urged the necessity of a navy, saying that up to that time the bey had captured 15 American vessels and made slaves of 180 officers and men, and the government had paid $1,000,000 for their ransom. The regular annual tribute began in 1795, following custom of European nations, replacing the previous ransom moneys paid only when men were captured.

In 1800 Captain Bainbridge took the tribute to Algiers. When he was leaving the bey ordered him to take an Algerian ambassador to Constantinople. When he refused the bey told him that the Americans paid him tribute and therefore were his slaves, and forced him to obey. Later while chasing a corsair pirate into Algiers his ship, the Philadelphia, struck a rock and Captain Bainbridge and his men were captured and made slaves. He wrote advising that his ship be wrecked, as the Algerians were planning to repair it. Lieutenant Decatur was given the task of burning it and sneaked up beside it, with a small crew, in a ketch, a small merchant vessel. He succeeded in overpowering the Algerian crew, set fire to the Philadelphia and burned it to the water's edge. He received the thanks of congress, a sword and a promotion for his deed. In May, 1815, he was commodore and was sent back to the Mediterranean at the head of a small fleet that not only conquered the pirates, but forced payment of $46,000 from the bashaw at Tunis for allowing the British to capture ships in that harbor, and $25,000 from the bey at Tripoli for damage to Americans' property. He also obtained the release of all American prisoners.

Save by Using Electric Power.

At the south side water works at Pueblo, Colo., an electrically driven direct connected pump, of a capacity of 3,000,000 gallons daily was installed during the year 1918. The city is now preparing to install a second unit with 6,000,000 gallons daily capacity, and it is the intention of the trustees to electrify the entire pumping system during 1919. The trustees estimate an annual saving of $10,000 when the plant is completely equipped for electrical operation.

To Our Patrons and Readers

The Hilltop Record has been published for nearly three years. It started as a little four column four page paper—at 50 cents a year. Since that time it has gone out regularly every week to Hilltop people, carrying information of Hilltop affairs to nearly every home. The business firms of the community have faithfully stood by the paper and this has been sincerely appreciated as it was only by this means that the paper was able to exist. We have also made every effort to stand by the Hilltop business firms and Hilltop people, always. We also appreciate the fact that hundreds and hundreds of Hilltop people have seen fit to do their "bit" in helping the paper along by subscribing for the same and rendering news items. But there are hundreds of others who, we know, look for the Record on publication days, and like to read it, and even some send items for publication—which we highly appreciate—but have not as yet subscribed for the same.

Now, every one knows that the cost of production on everything has advanced mightily during the last three years. It has not missed the Record office by any means. The cost of putting out this paper has been increased about 50 per cent during the last year. We have not raised in the price of the paper and are trying to keep from raising, but a trifle on the advertizing cost, in order to help bear this expense. But we ARE going to do one thing. That is, to ask all Hilltop people, who are interested enough in the paper, to just let us put your name on the subscription list at 50 cents a year. Now you know, dear reader, that is not asking much—hardly enough to pay for the sheet of paper your Record is printed on each week. But it WILL help us in these high-cost days to get out a better and more newsy paper this year than ever before. And we promise the Hilltop people if they will come up to the support of the paper in subscriptions as they should do, we will more than do our part in giving you a far better paper, with the financial help you give us. True, we know there are some who say, "Well, I get it for nothing—what's the use of paying for it?" Well, some have been, but that probably will not be the case very long. And besides wouldn't you feel better in reading it if you knew you were paying your share for it? Aren't you interested enough in your home community to spend the small sum of 50 cents to help support a paper that you know will be a benefit to both your community and yourself. If you don't see it this way, we do not ask you to subscribe, but if you do, send us your subscription and we will do our best to give you an up-to-date community paper.

Mrs. Dietrick is subscription manager of the Record. If you can not get to our office or send it to us, call us over the phone, Hilltop 701 and she will be glad to put you on the list. DO IT NOW.

Also do not forget to send any news items, as we will be glad to get them, any time up to Wednesday noon of each week.

False Economy in Words.

The insistent call for economy should not apply to the use of words, according to Lady Helen Munro Ferguson, wife of the Governor-General of Australia, who has been warning the students of the Presbyterian Ladies college in New South Wales not to make one word take the place of half a dozen others. "If you fail in the attempt to do something, you may perhaps say it is 'rotten,' when you only mean that it is tiresome; or, perhaps, some person may be just 'decent' when all the time you mean she is kind," remarked Lady Helen. And she added that the use of one word on occasions where it had no proper place would simply give the hearer a depressing idea of the capacity of the speaker. "Read good literature, learn good poetry, do things in the best way possible," was the kindly advice which accompanied the lecture on slang.

Exercise for Chickens.

On the theory that chickens are benefited by exercise, a Nevada man has invented a drinking fountain, elevated on a platform, to which fowls must fly to reach the water.

OBITUARY
Of Mrs. Alban Alban

By J. D. Jenkins

Oak Hill, O., Dec. 27, 1919.

Mrs. Catharine Alban was the daughter of William and Ann Jones. She was born in Wales, March 8, 1844. Emigrated to this country with her parents when about 5 years old. Locating at Oak Hill, where Mr. Jones, the father, lived and worked at the carpenter bench the remainder of his life. Mrs. Alban was brought up under the auspices of the C. M. Church and became a full-fledged member at 12 years of age and proved a faithful and consistent member unto the end.

June 25, 1867, we find her entering into a marriage vow with Mr. Alban Alban, of the Morish settlement and established their home on a farm in that community, at which place she became the mother of eleven children, all sons, and all of whom grew under her discipline, care and unceasing efforts to mannood, with the exception of one who died in infancy and all but one are being eyewitnesses of this sacred tribute to her mortal remains, viz.: John and Moses of Oak Hill, O.; William, of Wood Co., O.; Daniel, of Cincinnati, O.; Thomas and David (twins), Thomas-Evan and Luther, Columbus, O.; Gomer and Morgan, of Norwood, O.; David, of Van wert, O.

She lived to see all of them married and establish their own homes except Morgan, who as yet remains single. Much credit is due Mrs. Alban at this point for her devotion as a wife and mother. It was no trival affair in the domestic activity of her duty to care, provide and prepare for such a large family, with no other feminine help in the home. It was no small task for her to prepare her family even on Sunday morning to go to church, several miles distant, to dress them, prepare their dinner for them. But she did it and had them all there. Not only that, but she was so absorbed in the maintenance of family that she contributed freely and loyally of her physical strength (which the Lord had blessed her with) even in the harvest fields assisting in providing for their future welfare. She was an extraordinary hard-working, industrious woman, extremely ambitious and energetic.

Some 21 years ago Mr. and Mrs. Alban left the Morish settlement and moved to the Horst settlement, living in that community one year, then moved to Oak Hill, where they have remained since. About one year ago Mrs. Alban was stricken with a severe pain in her foot, which caused her much suffering and finally proved fatal. Passing out of this life to the great beyond last Wednesday night, December 24, 1919, at the age of 75 years, 9 months and 19 days.

She leaves to mourn, husband, ten sons, nineteen grandchildren and two great grandchildren, also two sisters, Mrs. Elizabeth Isaac, of Nebo settlement and Margaret, of Oak Hill, who ministered as mortal hands could do to her wants throughout her confinement and suffering.

We bid her adieu, hoping to see her again in a land where there will be no pains or suffering.

"Let us therefore be ready, for in the hour we think not the Son of Man commeth," and "Blesed are they that die in the Lord."

"To perpetuate the memory of the elders of the Glenwood Methodist Episcopal Church." So reads the first page of the memorial recently published by the Tri-Mu Class of the church.

The class has a total enrollment of 55 and during the recent war 135 men of the class responded to their country's call. As a memorial of their experiences, this book has been published.

The book is one of the first of its kind to be published in the entire country and has created considerable comment by the newspapers of the city.

The book contains pictures and histories of all men who were in service, written in as personal a way as possible in order to make it unusually interesting. The histories of the class, and of the church and its part in the war are told in a manner which interests all who have ever heard of them, and creates an interest in those who have not. The humorous side of camp life is portrayed by jokes, cartoons, and stories. Experiences of men in the service, air battles, life in the navy, etc., are related for our benefit.

The book is illustrated throughout with scenes of France, of life in camp, etc.

Copies are now on sale at $1.00 each and may be procured at Cussins and Hartsough or at the Wy-Mar Tire Co. Orders over the telephone will be taken by calling Hilltop 3596 or Hilltop 3674.

Dr. G. R. Robbins, wife and daughter have left "The Robbins' Nest" in the South and are expected to arrive in Columbus Friday morning. They have visited many places of interest besides visiting Mr. F. W. Robbins, Jr., and family. Dr. Robbins preached last Sunday in one of the largest and wealthiest churches in the South, the First Baptist, in Chattanooga. He will occupy his pulpit the coming Sunday. Topic morning, "This Shall Be the Best Year of My Life." Evening, "New Year's Lessons in Gethsemane." In addition to three choirs at the morning service and the new orchestra, a Hilltop young lady will sing a solo. The Lord's Supper will be administered and reception of new members. Dr. Robbins will preach each night during the week on great national and denominational subjects. The Southern Baptists have raised over eight million dollars and purpose making this over one hundred million. They have chartered a barge steamer which they intend to fill with missionaries in the autumn for helping in the evangelization of the world. The Northern Baptists will raise over one hundred millions for similar purpose. John D. Rockefeller, the richest man in the world, who is a Baptist, made a Christmas gift of another one hundred millions for medical and educational purposes. The Baptist denomination is now the largest and wealthiest denomination in the world. Hear Dr. Robbins Sunday at the Memorial Baptist Church, corner West Broad and Sandusky Streets.

Hill Crest Chautauqua.

On January 9th will present John Henry Newman, state librarian, in his humorous lecture, "Around the Road or Across the Field." Watch for big announcement next week. Warren G. Harding, U. S. Senator and presidential candidate, says, "John Henry Newman is an interesting, fascinating, lovable character. I like to call him 'Uncle Henry.'" Everybody else does for that matter. He has charm and personality in his manner upon the platform that holds his audience deeply interested from the beginning to the end." Reserve the date, Friday, January 9th.

Talking About Rugs

It's time now, to talk about that new rug for spring; and "here's a tip"—if you will need a rug within the next two years, you should not wait a minute, but come in look through our stock. You will find a splendid stock of Axminsters, Velvets and Wiltons—the rugs that really wear—and a "big line" of fine wool and fibre rugs for bed rooms, all at prices way below the market price for spring. A few months from now, it will not be a question of price that will concern you as much as your inability to secure certain rugs at all. Many of the best rug mill will not be able to deliver another rug to Columbus for another year, as the capacity for their output is now sold beyond that time.

"A WORD TO THE WISE IS SUFFICIENT"

Buy NOW, while the stocks are good and prices still low. Select your rug, make a deposit, and we will hold it for later delivery if you like, and you can pay the balance in easy weekly or monthly payments.

MUSCLE SHOALS NATION'S BULWARK

Big $60,000,000 Nitrate Plant a Defense for Future Generations.

INSURES NATIONAL DEFENSE

Assurance of Abundant American Explosives a Reason Why Germany Quit.

By GARRET SMITH.

One of the chief fortresses of America's new military defense system which developed out of the World War is the Ammonium Nitrate Plant at Muscle Shoals, Alabama, on the Tennessee River, over three hundred miles from the seacoast, capable of turning out 300 tons of high explosives a day. It assures to the United States for all time an abundance of ammunition without which an army is a helpless encumbrance and it has made this unlimited supply of explosives available without resort to raw material from outside of the country.

The essential ingredient of all modern military explosives is nitric acid Before the World War, America was entirely dependent upon Chile for the supply of nitrate of soda, the only chemical from which nitric acid can be made. In case this country became involved in war with any nation that could control the sea our foe would have us at her mercy, for she could cut off our essential means of striking back.

Other nations, however, were equally dependent upon the Chilean nitrate supply. Germany was purchasing one-third of it. She had expected to hold the sea with her submarines but failed. But a process for extracting nitrogen from the air had been obtained by Germany some years before from Italian chemists. This process had been successful in producing a high grade nitrogenous fertilizer from which in turn could be extracted ammonium nitrate. Germany, therefore, fell to manufacturing ammonium nitrate from the air on a large scale.

Americans Buy German Secret.

In 1907 an American company, headed by Frank S. Washburn, had secured the American rights to this process from Germany and had gone into manufacturing the fertilizer on the Canadian side of the Niagara Falls. When America found herself in the World War the Ordnance Department turned to Mr. Washburn's company for help. The Air Nitrates Corporation was formed, with Mr. Washburn at its head, to build the Muscle Shoals plant. It was assisted by several other well known corporations, such as the Westinghouse Church Kerr Company, which put up the plant buildings, the permanent city and utilities; the J. G. White Corporation, which designed and constructed the power plant; the Chemical Construction Company, which designed and built the nitric acid plant, and the M. W. Kellogg Company, which furnished the piping and built the chimneys.

Beginning work in November, 1917, the big plant and new city at Muscle Shoals was completed within one year's time. Had the expected spring drive of 1919 materialized this one plant alone would have been able to supply 13 per cent. of all the high explosives used by all the Allied armies on all fronts during that drive, and the United States was secure for all time to come against an ammunition shortage.

When the arrangement was finally made for building the big air nitrate plant, work was begun on a power dam at the same point. This work is being conducted directly by the United States Engineering Corps. It will not be completed, however, for two or three more years. It was necessary, therefore, in order to insure immediate operation when the nitrate plant was completed to construct a $10,000,000 steam power plant, one of the largest steam plants for the production of continuous electric power in the world. It is pointed out that even had the water-power plant been completed during the war it would have been necessary also to have constructed a steam plant to insure the nitrate plant working at full capacity at all times during the year.

Plant Worth All It Cost.

Now, this entire job cost the Government $60,000,000. It was put through at a time when the prices of materials and labor were at their summit. It was built at record speed, and speed costs money. The question naturally arises, then, as to whether Uncle Sam got his money's worth.

Tests made after the plant was in operation showed that ammonium nitrate of standard specifications could be produced at this plant at a cost of less than one-half the standard fixed price paid by the Government for ammonium nitrate produced by the older methods. This cost is only about one-fourth to one-fifth the cost of other high explosives of equal strength Compared with the older process for making ammonium nitrate, the savings made by this plant would have paid for the entire plant in about one and one-half years of operation.

The chief value of the Muscle Shoals plant, however, will be as a defense to coming generations.

A Horse and Buggy

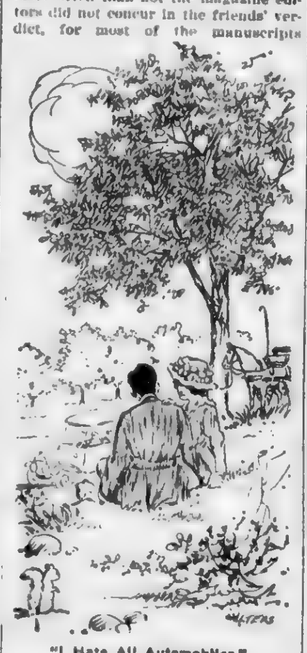
By R. RAY BAKER



(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Kenneth Phillips frowned when he saw the long, gray touring car come to a stop on the other side of the street. The frown deepened when he saw Harold Briggsworth step out of the car and jauntily mount the steps of the Harmon residence, slapping a driving golve jauntily against his leg. Kenneth's frown remained for ten minutes, then it changed to a savage scowl and he bit the rubber off the pencil he had been grinding between his teeth. The scowl was accounted for by the fact that Miss Matilda Harmon came tripping down the steps with Mr. Briggsworth and both of them got into the car and drove away.

Kenneth was seated in his office, which was nothing more nor less than a room in his paternal domicile. From the window he had a good view of Matilda's home, and he told himself it gave him an inspiration.

The young man was called a dreamer by many of the citizens of Cedar Springs, who had an idea of what he was trying to do but were dubious concerning his ability to do it. By a larger percentage of the population he was dubbed "shiftless."

His real friends, however—and among them he numbered Matilda Harmon, although he winced at applying the word "friend" to her—expressed sympathy with his purpose, and although they did not always have faith in his future, they professed to and gave him what encouragement they could. Mostly this encouragement consisted of praising his poems. More often than not the magazine editors did not concur in the friends' verdict, for most of the manuscripts came back, accompanied by little printed slips which expressed regrets and informed the poet that "rejection does not imply lack of merit." Occasionally, however, this send-out and get-back machinery got jammed and a check would be forthcoming instead of the poem and printed slip.

Kenneth winced at calling Matilda "friend," because he had ambitions which called for more intimate and endearing terms. In fact, that ambition was linked inseparably with his poetic aspirations. That was why he chose the window overlooking her home at which to do his writing.

However, the disadvantages of working at that window were more plentiful than the advantages. It seemed that every time he looked across the street for inspiration, he got instead a view of some big automobile taking one of Matilda's numerous suitors to her abode.

"I haven't a chance in the world," he said repeatedly during periods of sad soliloquy. "All those fellows are rich and have machines, and what kind of a show have my horse and buggy against such odds?"

"But I'll own a big machine, too, some day," he would add savagely, and then his typewriter would rattle steadily for an hour or so, and soon Kenneth would dash out of the house with a long envelope in his hand.

Matilda and Kenneth were born on opposite sides of the same street. Kenneth still lived in the house where he first opened his eyes on the world, while Matilda's parents had torn down their old residence and erected in its place a modern dwelling that could lay claim to being a veritable mansion. This happened three years ago, when Mr. Harmon reaped a harvest of several hundred thousand dollars from an investment in the automobile industry.

This, of course, projected the Harmons into a new social plane, and Matilda, who possessed exceedingly desirable physical as well as personal charms, became the target of a never-ceasing bombardment of matrimonial candidates.

Still, Kenneth was not left entirely in the cold. The childhood romance continued, in so far as outward ap-

Her Little Boy

By IZOLA FORRESTER

(Copyright, 1910, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The major endeavored to change the subject, but Mrs. Lathrop continued in the low southern tone he had grown to like more than any other voice at the Grand View hotel. They were walking on the wide veranda that looked seaward, and a midsummer, honey-colored moon was throwing a path of gold out over the waters of the bay. The last two evenings, while they took this same promenade at moonrise, the major had wondered whether he would be able to escape the penalty of sentiment before the moon slipped back into her first quarter.

"He's such a dear little lad, big blue eyes and that crimsy curly hair, don't you know, that gives a boy such a manly look? I've kept him at the military academy ever since he was ten. I felt I ought to make the sacrifice for his sake, even while I dreaded the separation. And I wanted him in a western school. I do think the ideals are more democratic, don't you, Major Chalmers?" She caught his nod contentedly, and went on. "His letters have been so tender and well—sort of big in their outlook, for such a little chap, I thought. Did I read the last one to, you? I meant to. They have just been everything to me in the years of separation."

"I trust his coming will not cut short your stay here, Mrs. Lathrop." The major threw an extra note of solicitude in his voice, as he slipped her silk scarf over her shoulders. "We could hardly spare you now."

"Still, I think, Irene wishes you would go on to Newport," she spoke thoughtfully and delicately. "It is rather slow here for a young, attractive girl like her."

They had reached a turn on the veranda, and the dancing floor of the big double music room came in view. It was brilliantly lighted for the nightly "hop," and even from where they stood they could see the court of Irene, her dark hair and white, slim shoulders, turned to them, and surrounding her all the available, best looking men in the hotel. The major frowned and laughed at the same time.

"Slow? She's kept me busy refusing suitors ever since she got out of school three weeks ago. She's just seventeen and——" he paused, the next words that would commit him to future matrimony trembling on his tongue. Mrs. Lathrop lifted her head and looked at him attentively, earnestly, her gray eyes filled with understanding sympathy. They had shadows beneath them, and her skin was dusky like a peach blow vase, the lips a beautiful rose touch, and a deep dimple in her pointed chin. And suddenly the major was stumbling like a boy, telling her how the one hope of his life was to win her as his wife.

"But what about Irene? She has been everything to you ever since your sister died."

"Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," quoted the major, lifting her hand close to his lips.

The next morning before her breakfast tray had been sent up, Mrs. Lathrop had a caller. There came a heavy, imperative rap on the outer door of her suite, and then the door opened and a strange man entered. Surely, it was a strange man. Mrs. Lathrop gave a frightened little cry and sat up in bed, her silk negligee drawn close about her shoulders, as she stared at him. He was five foot ten, and broad of shoulder, tanned and jubilant, a husky, healthy youngster of nineteen.

"Mother, you grand old darling, how are you?" He wrapped her about in a swift, hungry embrace that left her crushed and aghast. "I came sooner than I expected to, because a bunch of the fellows were bound this way and I wanted to make the races with them at New London. Gee, the ocean smells good. I'm hungry, too."

"Ralph," she put him from her gently, almost feebly. "How did you ever grow so tall and enormous?"

"Sight, am I? I was afraid I'd shock you." He kissed her laughingly, without remorse. "It's funny to have such a pretty little mother. I'll bet a cookey you're a heart smasher yet."

Mrs. Lathrop winced at the last word. Yet? Her forty-eight years had never faced her so uncompromisingly before. Later on, as they walked along the board walk to the beach, she felt her heart beat fast at the thought of the impending meeting with the major. Her little boy she had called him, and he had really seemed that. It had been three years since she had seen him and he had been a little, awkward, half-grown cub of a boy, and now he was a man. She wondered if it would mean the end of her own midsummer romance. Would the major stand the shock? Suddenly Ralph gave a low whistle and looked ahead of them, his eyes keen with quick joy.

"Say, mother dear, excuse me just a minute, won't you? There's a girl I met out West."

She sat down to wait for him under one of the sunshade shelters, and here the major joined her. He was delightfully proprietary and tender with her, and then he sighed and motioned to her to look down on the beach.

Two figures showed behind a cherry red parasol.

"I told Irene this morning, and she laughed at me and 'fessed up. It seems that she's been engaged for four months, and didn't dare tell me because it seemed just a boy and girl affair. Have you any sympathy with them at all? I mean do you think they know their own minds?"

"I sympathize with romance always, and it is never so ideally beautiful as in youth," she answered.

Then the cherry parasol twirled in their direction, just as she wondered how she could break the shock of Ralph, and coming leisurely and happily toward them were the two—Irene and Ralph. There was no mistaking their attitude toward each other, and the major smiled proudly.

"Nice sort of chap, isn't he? I like that military cut he has. First name's Ralph. Didn't catch the last."

Mrs. Lathrop leaned forward, her eyes filled with sudden tears, "Why, why"— she faltered before she thought, "it's my little boy!"

The major's hand closed over hers, and they waited.

"I knew all along that you were Ralph's mother, but I didn't dare say a word until he came," Irene said, blushingly. "But I was so glad when Uncle Everard thought you were so dear and wonderful, for of course I suppose we'll be one family now, won't we?"

It was the major's cue and he rose to it with all the grace and ease he could have used in making a five-hour address before the state legislature down home in Georgia.

"I cannot conceive of anything that would add more to your mother's happiness and mine at this moment than that you should find life's answer in the love of Irene, my boy, because," and here the major's eyes gleamed with a touch of mischief, "because this same contagion of romance that by some grace of God has come to a war weary world has lighted the path ahead for us also. I think possibly the months abroad the past two years have made us realize the uncertainty of human life, and that there are very few really essential things after all. Love and faith and comradeship and honor. What do you say, Ralph? Your mother and I will be married before fall. I trust that you and Irene will be with us."

Ralph bent to kiss his mother.

"Did I guess it the first time I looked at you?" he said tenderly. "I told her, major, she was a heart smasher."

WHY BRABANT IS HONORED

Belgian Province Has Figured Long and Gloriously in the History of the Nation.

The title of duke of Brabant is given the crown prince of Belgium to perpetuate the name of the most populous province of the nation. It is only about the size of Rhode Island, but has thrice the population. It was conquered by Caesar, settled by Salic Franks, parceled out to Germany and made a part of Lower Lorraine. It then included North Brabant, now the largest province in Holland. For a time it was the pawn of its ruling dukes, but in 1354 the people wrested the "Joyeuse Entree," which was akin to the British Magna Charta, from Duke John III. Brabant passed to the house of Burgundy and then fell into Spanish dominion, until the treaty of Utrecht gave it to the Hapsburgs of Austria. It was at Brussels that the uprising against Spanish tyranny was begun, which resulted in the 80 years' war of independence. The nation bore the Hapsburg yoke no more willingly and when Joseph II tried to interfere with the "Joy Entree," he precipitated the revolt of 1789. At Brussels, too, was fomented the revolution of 1830 against the Dutch rule, which resulted in the independence of Belgium. One of the first acts of the new nation was to adopt the Brabant colors for the national flag, and the lion of Brabant as the national coat-of-arms.

Takes Auto With Him.

Whenever Premier Clemenceau travels in a special train his automobile is always carried on a flat car at the end. If a railroad wreck delays his train he resorts to the automobile. This happened the other day when, on returning from his vacation in Vendee, a wrecked freight train blocked the track.

Bungalow.

Bungalow is derived from the Hindu word "bangla," which means a thatched hut.

A Horse and Buggy

pearances were concerned, and Matilda did not seem in the least changed.

She accepted his intentions the same as she always had; whenever he asked her for an evening with her she acquiesced; nevertheless, Kenneth felt that they were separated by a wide gulf—the gulf of wealth and ancient prestige.

She used to go riding with him in his buggy, but of late he had not been able to summon the courage to suggest such an excursion—not with all those big automobiles lying in wait for Matilda.

"I'll work my head off and get a car larger than any of them," he would mutter frequently to himself as he worked into the late hours of the night in an endeavor to make good that threat.

A big rift was made in the clouds when a reputable publishing concern wrote Kenneth a letter suggesting that he submit some poems with a view to publication in book form. Kenneth at once put his nose to the grindstone and worked for three weeks with scarcely an intermission.

During that time he did not see Matilda except when he glimpsed her leaving with some young hopeful in a car. At last, one Saturday night Kenneth completed his task and went out to mail a huge envelope containing the manuscript for the prospective book.

Sunday morning Kenneth was surprised to receive a telephone call from across the street.

"What's the trouble? Are you sick? Why don't you ever show yourself?" she inquired in one breath.

Kenneth felt like telling her that she seemed to be kept busy enough, with the various kinds of expensive cars that called for her, but instead he informed her that he had been hard at work.

"You're overdoing this work idea," she said. "Why don't you harness up old Jack and take me for a ride this afternoon? Things have come to a pretty pass when a girl has to ask a gentleman friend for an engagement."

Kenneth's mouth opened so wide it seemed to have designs on the mouth piece of the phone. He stammered and gurgled, but finally managed to ask:

"Why—you you're fooling, aren't you, Mil?"

"No, indeed," she responded. "I'd honestly like a ride behind old Jack. I'm fed up on automobiles."

"Well, you certainly shall have the diversion you seek," he promised her, and that afternoon old Jack and the buggy took Matilda and Kenneth out into the woods to a spot where the two young people had been wont to gather flowers and hold picnics when they were children.

They sat on a knoll overlooking a courtyard. Motor cars of various sizes and makes darted back and forth in never-ending streams.

"This is the best day I've had in years," Matilda observed nestling close to Kenneth.

"The same with me," he agreed, and somehow a queer little thrill seemed to go over him.

"I wish we could do this every day," she went on. "Don't you?"

"Yes, yes, of course, certainly," Kenneth said. "Naturally I'd like to be with you every day; but your financial and social standing would scarcely permit it—now."

Her lips twitched and she picked up a stone and hurled it at a tree, missing the target by several feet.

"Why don't you leave that to me to decide?" she demanded, turning on him with flaming eyes. "Have I ever intimated anything to that effect?"

He was silent for a moment trying to collect his thoughts.

"It's this way, Mil," he finally broke out. "I've been dead in love with you ever since we were kids. I thought I had a good show until—until your father made all that money and the rich fellows began to call and take you riding in their big machines; and then I looked at my poor prospects and considered poor old Jack and the buggy, and decided there wasn't much chance after all. Of course, I still feel the same and—if my ambitions—well, it may sound foolish to you, but maybe I'll have a book published soon, and if it succeeds and I get a good royalty—then—maybe—"

"Yes, yes, go on," she said, smiling, with a peculiar glistening in her eyes. "You interest me, Ken. This may all seem improper, what I'm going to say, because you can't divide this year with four, but we've been such good friends for so long a time that I guess my little speech will be all right. Anyhow, I'm going to make it. I invited you to take me riding today and I may as well go the limit with my boldness. What I wanted to say is this:

"I hate all automobiles. I hate the money my father made in the business, and I hate every man that comes to take me riding. What I'd like would be a little cottage and a horse and buggy—old Jack and that same vehicle he draws would do nicely—and I'd like to have you take me far away to the shore of some lake away, far away from the smell of gasoline, and there—there I'd help you write poetry, and I just know you'd succeed. I know you'll win with your book. I have a premonition that it will—and a woman's premonition never fails."

When the sun sank behind the hills, leaving a crimson streak blending with the blue of the sky, the boy and girl still were seated on the knoll, speaking in low tones when they spoke at all.

And whenever an automobile shot past in the gathering dusk, squawking a warning to the world, they smiled disdainfully, and when old Jack, tethered to a nearby tree, neighed impatiently, they smiled—just smiled.

The Lord's Prayer

The following beautiful composition was found during the war at Charleston, S. C. It was printed on heavy satin, July 4th, 1823. It was picked up by A. P. Green of Auburn, Indiana at Corinth, Miss., the morning the rebel forces evacuated it, May 20th, 1862.

Thou to thy mercy seat our souls doth gather to do our duty unto Thee

Our Father

To whom all praise and honor should be given for thou art the great God

who art in Heaven

Thou by thy wisdom, rul'st the world's whole frame, forever, therefore hallowed be thy name;

Let thy commands be by none, but thy good pleasure and

Thy kingdom come

Let nevermore delays divide us from Thy glorious grace, but let

Thy will be done

And let our promptness to obey, be even the very same

on earth as it is in Heaven;

Then for our souls, O Lord, we also pray Thou would'st be pleased to Give us this day

The food of life wherewith our souls are fed sufficient raiment and our daily bread,

With every needful thing, do thou relieve us and of thy mercy, pity

and forgive us

All our misdeeds for Him, whom thou did'st please to make an offering for our trespasses

And for as much, O Lord, as we believe that Thou wilst pardon us

as we forgive

Let them love each, wherewith Thou dost show us to pardon

those who trespass against us

And though, sometimes, Thou find'st we have forgot this love to Thee, yet help and lead us not

Through soul and body's want to desperation nor let earth's gain drive us into temptation

Let not the soul of any true believer fall in time of trial

but deliver

Yea, save them from the malice of the devil and both in life and death, keep us from evil,

Thus pray we, Lord, for that of Thee, from whom this may be had for Thine is the kingdom

This world is of Thy work its wonderous story to Thee belongs

the power and the glory,

And all Thy glorious works have ended never but will remain forever and forever.

Thus, we poor creatures, would confess again and thus would say, eternally

Amen.

Vol. 3. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, January 8, 1920 No. 38

NEWS HAPPENINGS

There will be two basket-ball games tonight at the Glenwood Shelter House between the following teams; St. Aloysius vs. Friends and Holy Family vs. St. Johns. The first game will be called at 7:45 and two good games are assured for this evening's programme. The crowd Tuesday was estimated at about 700 people, so come early and get a seat.

Tuesday marked the opening of the West Church Basket-Ball League and after the Chairman Rev. Perrins made a few brief remarks, he introduced as speakers for the evening Mr. Westlake and Mrs. Knoderer who spoke in behalf of the City and Recreation Department. West Park then trounced West Broad by the score of 22-14. This was by far the best game of the evening as the score at the end of the first half was 12 all. Gift St. then took a close game from Hoge Memorial by the score of 15-8. In the closing contest Glenwood easily won from St. Paul by the one-sided score of 33-9. The scores for the games are as follows:

West Park 22; West Broad 14.
Hoge Memorial 8; Gift St. 15.
Glenwood 33; St. Paul Evangelical 9.

L. M. Seiller has entered into athletics under the guise of basket-ball. Glenwood Blues, who were in the race for city championship honors last year, have secured him for a backer for this season. The following players have been signed: Grossman, formerly of Grove City high school; Sullivan of last year's Francis Dry Cleaners championship team; Hayden of Shawnee; Bonowitz of the McGowans, Yerke, Peake, Welch and Corder of last years Glenwood team. Seillers have entered the Capital City League and with the help of all loyal Hilltop rooters, hope to prove a big winner this coming season.

The Intermediate C. E. of the Hilltop Church of Christ held a watch party on new year's eve at the home of the Misses Johnston, 90 Eldon Ave. After a short business meeting, the evening was spent in playing games, attending a circus and visiting an art gallery. After refreshments were served at a late hour, the Intermediates gathered around the piano and sang Endeavor songs, thus ushering in the New Year.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Buker, Misses LaRue and Marie Slicker, Misses Bernice and Lillian Grumney, Miss Louise Barnhart, Miss Charlene Taylor, Miss Doris Kober, Miss Velma Currier, Miss Elizabeth Roush, Miss Margaret Tracy, Miss Lucille Hall, Mr. David Sword, Mr. Arthur Jones, Mr. Leslie Kober, Mr. Albert Hall and the hostesses, Helen, Faith and Norma Johnston.

Mrs. P. G. Gantz and Mrs. L. M. Seiller were hostesses to the members and husbands of the Hilltop Embroidery Club at a delightful New Year's eve party last Wednesday evening. The evening was spent playing progressive pit, Mrs. Matson and Mr. L. M. Seiller taking head prizes and Mrs. C. O. Irwin and Mr. Merriman bringing in the booby prizes. As the bells and whistles told of the going of the old and coming of the new year, delightful refreshments were served to the following guests: Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Wells, Dr. and Mrs. T. S. Fox, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Matson, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Randall, Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Irwin, Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Merriman, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Seiller, Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Gantz.

A group of friends gave a party honoring Mr. Austin Bishop at the home of Miss Verna Peake, 26 North Warren Ave. Those present were: Miss Doris Barnes, Miss Iris Clover, Miss Helen Kunsi, Miss Ruth Young and Miss Verna Peake, Mr. Austin Bishop, Mr. Charles Sharp, Mr. Lester Bishop, Mr. Julius Fledderjohann and Mr. Robert Wilson. Mr. Bishop is attending school at Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Mrs. Daniel Churton and sons John and Daniel, Jr., of Huntington, W. Va., accompanied by Mr. Churton's brother, Mr. Jabez Churton who has recently arrived from England, are guests of Mrs. Isabel Burnside and daughters, 39 N. Ogden Ave. Mr. Churton served with the British Royal Field Artillery from Sept., 1915 to March, 1919, having served on every front which the British occupied. He has the Mons ribbon and two other medals for distinguished service, and altho he was under heavy fire many times, he came thru without a scratch, but with a store of experiences which any soldier might be proud to have.

Miss Edna Kuch, reader, together with Lavera Broter, pianist and Mr Carl Hugg, violinist, were responsible for an entertainment of the Farmers' Institute which met at Alton, Ohio, Thursday and Friday of last week.

Dr. A. H. Koerner, age 56, of Woodsfield, Ohio, died at State Hospital, Tuesday. The remains were sent home Wednesday by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Seiller Bros. for Ladies Coats.

Misses Ruth Hecker and Mildred Phalor spent the holidays at the home of Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Turley in Oxford, O. They were joined on Friday Jan. 2, by Misses Mary Watts and Irene Preest for a week-end house party. On Friday evening a delightful social function was given in their honor at which 30 guests were present.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Budd, 49 S. Harris Ave., entertained with a New Year's dinner. Their guests being, Mr. Wade Budd, Galena, Ohio, Miss Edith Douglass, Barnesville, Ohio, Dr. and Mrs. I. B. Harris and family of Franklin Park West.

Hilltop 1920 Diary

By TOP. O'HILL

Jan. 1—Clear, cold and dry (as a bone.) Generally quiet. Quite a lot of Hilltop folks going over town, probably to see Karb go out and Thomas go in. A long line of autos in front of Mr. and Mrs. Karl Webber's residence, have brought 150 guests to their annual New Year's open house, which has been observed as a yearly stunt for 16 or 18 years. The young folks will dance there this evening. Over in Skid More's neighborhood the Friends Rescue home are having a good time. About 75 East Side W. C. T. U.'s have brought a lot of clothing, canned goods, etc.

Jan. 2—Holidays gone, so've big dinners. Back to weiners, spaghetti, etc. Bills commencing to come in. Weather colder. Rents higher, gas lower. Wrote it "1919" several times already.

Jan. 3—Much colder. Sat down on seat in street car; cold came clear through. Wished I had put on heavier ones. Gas still lower. Though it was on account of cold, but informed a West Side dame was having a tooth pulled and preferred "gas." Hope she'll get it out before time to get supper.

Jan. 4—Went to church for the first time this year. Took a walk westward; saw old friend Cam. Chase who appeared to be frozen up solid clear to the suburbs. Otherwise everything else quiet.

Jan. 5—M. H. Prior still invoicing and selling Caloric furnaces. Chas. Shover and other postmen loaded down with "bills." Certain Hilltop resident says he knows now that cold expands, because it's always about a square further to his business place in cold weather. A good time for real estate men to stake off another lot or so. All off for kids—back to school again.

Jan. 6—Bunch of members from Avondale U. B. church took in revival meeting at Burgess Ave. U. B. Getting warmer, so J. W. Young, grocer, removed his limburger cheese back with the ammonia bottles again so as to preserve it—one or the other.

Jan. 7—Many Hilltop sons and daughters start out without "skid chains" on their feet—result, "a spill." Cause—icy streets and sidewalks.

Mr. Jacob Link bought a Caloric for his fine new home at Camp Chase.

THE STRAP-HANGER

It's great to stand upright.

Did yo uever feel that fellow feeling borne of mutual suffering when you lurched into your neighbor hanging on the adjacent strap and he into you as that motorman suddenly "applied the air." Can you do that and smile? Good! We knew you could.

May we not call them our Senior and our Junior councilmen from the Hilltop? We have some representation. Let the R.-L. Co. give us a guarantee as to what they can and will do under a higher rate before we pledge our support. The burden of proof is theirs. Let it be made plain that any benefits to be derived from increased fare is to accrue to the riding public as well as to the corporation.

The Strap-hanger has paid the rental on that strap for so long that he feels he ought to own it. I wonder how many times Columbus people have paid for the cars they ride upon, today.

We are told the erect posture is most conducive to good health. We see lots of square-shouldered, healthy people on the Hilltop.

Were you looking for talent? The Hilltop has it in great variety. Have you seen the Soldiers' Memorial Magazine of Glenwood. Tri-Mu did it.

Can you visualize a fine four or five story office and bank building on the Hilltop? Who will finance it, please?

S

Rev. Aura Smith, who is conducting revival meetings at West Park M. E. church, will talk to the West Side Brotherhood at that church next Sunday at 2:30 p. m. All men are invited to come

Mrs. J. H. Cussins said $500 would not buy her Caloric if she could not get another.

Mrs. Laura McElreth of 49 S. Harris Ave., left Dec. 30 for St. Petersburgh, Florida, to spend the winter.

Dr. W. S. Murray, Dentist, Broad and Terrace, Hilltop 2965.

The blessings of life insurance are many and have relieved distress and suffering many times when help was most needed. But it remained for the Equitable Life Assurance Society of U. S. to devise a plan by which through their Home Purchase Insurance you can buy a home on the monthly payment plan and in case of death the mortgage will be cancelled. Edw. Wollam of 415 South Ogden Ave., is one of the Equitable agents and will be pleased to give desired information. Just phone Hilltop 3105.

Why spoil your cellar with a lot of pipes when you can heat your house with a Caloric Pipeless Furnace.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Meurath of 356 South Eureka Ave., died last Sunday night. Burial was held Monday by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Rev. Clarence Wilhelm of Marion, Ind., is holding a three-weeks revival campaign at the City Rescue Mission, 17 W. Maple St.

Viola Bryan wishes to thank the Hilltop people for their generous patronage during her Xmas sale.

Mrs. W. H. Beckett entertained the members of the Personal Workers Class of Hoge Memorial church Monday evening at her home 62 N. Warren Ave.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Kusch and son Fred of Detroit, Mich., spent Xmas with Mr. and Mrs. Justus Scheiderer and family, 96 S. Hague Ave.

Mr. Fred Kuch of Scott City, Kan., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs H. O. Kuch, 465 S. Warren Ave.

Seiller Bros. for Ladies Dresses

Miss Ruth Bowers, Findlay, O., visited Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Schoonover, 163 N. Warren Ave.

Rev. A. E. Cowly and wife have moved from 127 N. Park to 47 N. Park Ave.

Chas. Shover the postman says "Caloric" spells comfort. Ask him.

Dr. Horace Hocter and Mr. William Heyer of Newark, N. J., are guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Evans, 250 N. Park Ave. Their stay will be indefinite.

Mr. Lou A. Reason, proprietor of The White Kitchen of West Jefferson, Ohio, W. A. Reason and Miss Adelaide Milligan, ate turkey Christmas day with Mrs. Virginia Fullmer and son Ray, at 362 S. Hurris Ave.

Prior bought another car load of Calorics to help keep the west side people warm and comfortable.

Mrs. Virginia Fullmer and son Ray, entertained at their home at 362 S. Harris Ave., Mr. and Mrs. Edward Silver and Miss Adelaide Milligan at a six o'clock dinner New Year's.

Misses Bessie and Catherine Sperry were hostesses Tuesday evening of this week to the Eureka Chapter Westminster Guild, at their home 45 S. Harris Ave.

Remember the word Caloric stands for heat comfort.

Mrs. Phoebe Jerman, Mrs. Jennie Budd and Mrs. Fannie Ogg, were entertained at luncheon at the home of Mrs. Annie Ramey and Miss Laura Rigby at 159 West Fifth Ave., last Friday.

Mr. W. L. Vance of Kansas City, Kansas, spent last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Bishop, 56 N. Warren Ave.

People buy Caloric over the telephone. Prior sold two that way last Saturday.

CHURCH DOINGS

HOGE MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

9:15 A. M.—Bible school. Graded lessons for all. Parents will appreciate these thorough graded lessons for their children.

10:30 A. M.—Morning Worship and Sermon: "Religion—A Loadstone." Chorus Choir.

4 P. M.—Vespers. Sermon, subject: "Mark 10—Jesus Estimates Personal Virtues." The second sermon in the series. "Four Significant New Testament Chapters."

5 P. M.—Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. Subject: "A Strong Character and How It Is Attained." All young people invited. We welcome you.

ST. JOHN'S EV. LUTHERAN

Services at 10:30 and 7:00 o'clock. The holy communion celebrated at both services.

Morning theme: What the Lutheran Church Teaches in Regard to the Lord's Supper.

Evening theme: The Great Preacher Preaching at Nazareth.

St. John's Ladies Aid Society meets on next Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 14.

The Ladies Aid Society of St. John's Lutheran Church gives an oyster supper at Renner's Hall on Saturday, Jan. 17, from 4 to 9 o'clock. Other good eats for those who do not prefer oysters. Price 35 cents.

BURGESS AVE U. B.

The revival meeting continues to grow in interest and attendance. The gospel is being preached with great power by Evangelist W. A. Lockwood from night to night. You are missing a great opportunity if you fail to hear this mighty preacher of the plain gospel of Jesus Christ. Meetings each evening at 7:30, corner Burgess and Sullivant Aves.

HIGHLAND AVE. FRIENDS

The revival meetings continue to go on, and a good work is being accomplished. Many are being helped, and some are praying clear through.

Service each evening at 7:30 P. M., except Saturday. Services Sunday at 10:30 A. M. and 7:30 P. M.

A cordial invitation is extended to all.

GLENWOOD METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

9:15 a. m. Sunday school, M. H Prior, superintendent. Classes for all ages. Orchestra music.

10:30 A. M.—Morning worship with sermon by the pastor, subject, "The Maid and the Princess," a sermon to children. An unusual interest is being manifested in these children's services which are being held once a month. The entire sermon, which is always brief, is preached to the children, but the adult portion of the congregation seem to be equally interested, for they are bringing out a large attendance.

6 P. M.—Epworth League. Topic: "A Strong Character and How it is Obtained."

7 P. M.—Evening worship and sermon, subject: "Spiritual Weapons."

Sixty-nine new members have been received into this church since Conference, an average of five each Sunday since the new year opened. Careful preparation is now being made for an evangelistic campaign to begin the first of February with Tony A. Anderson, Kentucky evangelist, in charge. The finances of the church are organized on a scriptural basis, and the treasurer's report at the end of the first quarter showed all bills paid to date with a surplus in the treasury, and the Centenary fund in satisfactory condition.

HILLTOP CHURCH OF CHRIST

Bible School 9:30. Communion 10:30. Morning topic: "Stumbling Blocks."

Evening service 7:30. Topic, "The Barren Fig Tree."

THE HILLTOP ENGLISH EV. LUTHERAN CHURCH

9:30 Sunday School.

10:30 Morning Worship. Short sermon by pastor. Holy communion.

The annual congregational meeting will be held immediately to hear reports and elect officers. Every member should be present.

The Ladies Aid and Missionary Society will meet at the chapel on Wednesday, Jan. 14th, at two o'clock. A full attendance is urged.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST CHURCH

Dr. G. R. Robbins will again preach upon great themes Sunday.

Morning: "Get Up and Get These Christians and Churches in this New and Unparallelled Age with its Immeasurable Opportunities."

Evening: "The Church Awakened by a Rediscovery of the Reality and Power of Prayer."

Dr. Robbins will preach each night during the coming week. Come and worship with us. Perhaps no church in Columbus during the past year has made more wonderful progress in finances than this church. The pastor is not backward in publicly stating if any do not like his preaching and methods they are free to go elsewhere. A pastor's assitant will soon be called to take charge of the visiting and many parts of the work including the work of pastor's private secretary and stenographer. The large salary will come just in answer to prayer.

HILL CREST BAPTIST CHURCH

9:30—Sunday School for all ages.

10:30 Morning Worship. "The Great Contemporary."

Juniors 2:30 p. m., Seniors 6 p. m.

Wednesday Prayer Meeting and Evening preaching. Special sermon by the pastor. Subject: "Can We Talk With the Dead?" This will be a message on Spiritualism. What about the dead soldier boys? What are the three black I's of Spiritualism? What does the scripture say about it? These questions will be dealt with.

Wednesday evening, Prayer Meeting. Choir practice Thursday evening.

HILL CREST CHAUTAUQUA

See our large ad. Governor Cox says of J. Henry Newman: "I have listened a great deal to J. Henry Newman, and every audience that I have seen him address, gave manifestation of its desire to have him go on. Mr. Newman knows human nature. He has seen all phases of life, and has tasted the bitter with the sweet. There's not an experience of childhood, apparently, that does not remain indelibly on his impressions, and his running observations of life flow from a philosophy profund and happy."

A Newman Nugget—"If you can't take hold of the wheel and boost the load stand out of the way and don't frighten the team."

The Glenwood Home Mission Society will meet Thursday afternoon, Jan. 15 at 2 o'clock with Mrs. Eldon Smith, 2488 W. Broad. An interesting program will be given. This will be an Americanization meeting.

The regular meeting of the J. R. B. Class will be held at the home of Mrs. Colburn, 304 Midland Ave., next Tuesday evening, Jan. 13, with Mrs. Cannon, Mrs. Carroll, Mrs. Constans, Mrs. Clevenger and Mrs. Cransord as assistant hostesses.

Dr. E. W. Martindale said the Caloric way is the way to keep the home WARM.

Will the person who picked up pocketbook on West Broad or thereabouts last Sunday, containing money, key and other articles, please return same to 111 N. Oakley Ave., or call Hilltop 3024. No questions will be asked. Reward.

Mr. W. H. Shapter, 698 W. Broad ordered a Caloric from Prior's Hdwe.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Peake and daughter Miss Verna Peake and Miss Ruth Young of Camp Chase, motored to Troy, Ohio, last Friday to visit Miss Katherine Yantis and other friends. Miss Verna Peake remained until New Year's day. Several parties were given in her honor.

Women Writers' Advantage.

The woman writer was comparing men and women authors. "We women have an advantage over the male writers," she said. "Because if the muse refuses to be wooed we can indifferently turn to knitting a sock or trimming a hat, which is the surest way to bring the muse to terms. I know an author, a man, who says he goes to his study for three hours every day at exactly the same time. He says that sometimes he will spend most of that time staring at a sheet of paper with not an idea in his head. Now, I think that is a wicked waste of time, and the muse is probably giggling at him.

"When my time for writing comes and I try to set apart a certain period of every day if no ideas come I just seize my stocking bag and darn up a few holes, or I cut out a pretty dress for my kiddie, or I knit 20 rows. And then the ideas begin to rush into my head thick and fast. Yes, we women certainly know how to handle the muse better than the men folks—for we know that nothing will get her attention quicker than indifference and neglect."—Springfield Union.

THIS CITY BUILT WHILE YOU WAIT

Fourth Largest Town in Alabama Full Grown in One Year.

HAD A MODEL GOVERNMENT

Permanent Settlement Around U. S. Nitrate Plant Presented Unusual Problems.

By GARRET SMITH.

The fourth largest city in Alabama, peopled with 25,000 souls of diverse races and religions, uprooted from far scattered communities in every part of the United States and Canada sprang into being almost overnight around the great new government ammonium nitrate plant down on the open cotton and corn fields at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River during the last year of the World War. Here was a problem in city building, municipal government and community welfare that has seldom been equalled and the success of its solution has never been excelled.

The job was in the hands of the Air Nitrates Corporation which had been organized under the direction of the Ordnance Department to build plant and city at Muscle Shoals. Early in January, 1918, this new town had a few temporary buildings and a population of 300. This had jumped by the middle of August to more than 21,000. A population multiplied by 70 in 7 months.

In the management of the new towns and army cantonments that sprang up during the war the old time evils that attended the growth of mushroom cities have been avoided by the application of modern welfare systems. But nowhere were conditions more difficult than at Muscle Shoals. Here was a malarial region threatened at the same time with other deadly disease epidemics. Transportation was lacking. No nearby labor was available and the general labor shortage was at its most acute stage. Costs of labor and supplies were leaping over night. Furthermore, Muscle Shoals differed from all the other new war towns inasmuch as it was to be permanent.

New Government Devised.

The managers, besides city government, had to handle the entire retail business of the town. A camp supervisor's department was put in charge of the maintenance of all buildings, fire protection and sanitation. The camp supervisor looked after everything from the mending of a lock to the remodeling of groups of buildings or laying sewers or steam mains. For the bachelor contingent a commissary department was necessary.

The business department managed the stores, canteens, motion picture theaters, pool parlors, tailor shops, dry cleaning establishments, barber shops, newsstands, a hotel, a vegetable farm and a hog farm where 1,000 hogs were raised on the wastes from eating places. It maintained a slaughter house where these hogs were put through the regular packing house course. It operated a laundry which cleaned 7,493 pieces a day. Then there was a real estate department that rented and managed the family quarters and a housing department which assigned to quarters everybody excepting the families.

Under separate jurisdiction from its community director were the police.

The health department, in charge of a physician from New York city, started with a small office in one of the temporary buildings, and was soon full grown and splendidly equipped. Conditions were favorable to disease. The winter was the severest on record in northern Alabama. The men were compelled to work either in deep snow or mud above their knees. As a result a pneumonia epidemic developed among the Negroes that spring. Later in the year a typhoid epidemic was threatened. Moreover, the site of the plant was in the heart of the malaria district. But the pneumonia epidemic was checked, the typhoid threat nipped in the bud, and malaria stamped out.

A Health Record Established

The little first-aid hospital presently grew to a complete modern institution with a nurses' home and a separate dispensary for dental, eye, ear, nose, throat, genito-urinary clinics and a surgical dispensary for first-aid work.

During the eight months when the death rate was not affected by the influenza and pneumonia epidemics the general health rate was 12.4 per thousand per year, which is lower than in most cities in the same latitude and climate, and the pneumonia death rate during the epidemic was lower than in most army cantonments.

Much of the success of the health administration is due to the establishment of the Muscle Shoals sanitary district by the United States Public Health Service.

The education and welfare department also had a vital work to perform. There was a school population of over 1,000. The Secretary of War created the community organization branch of the Ordnance Department which, with advice and aid of some of the greatest school men of the country, prescribed the courses of study and recruited teachers from the best established systems.

Always a Way Out

By LILIAN HALL CROWLEY

(©, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Allie, dear, you look worried."

"I am worried, mother."

"Why, what have you to be worried about? You're young and pretty and engaged to John Shuler, the finest young man in the world."

"It's this, mother: John has always moved in the best circles both at his home and at the university, and we have lived so simply here—pinching nickels—that I won't know how to manage the beautiful home he is building for us."

"You'll learn, dear, and I will tell you everything I know. I had a nice home once."

"Yes, I know, mother, but telling isn't seeing. I lack the practical knowledge of everyday usage. We've mostly eaten out of boxes, we've been so busy."

"That's true enough, Allie."

Mrs. Mangan and her daughter were sewing in their tiny living room during this conversation. Two weeks before Alice had finished her first year in college. While there she had met John Shuler and it was a love affair at first. Alice was working her way through college by being an assistant teacher.

Her mother, left a widow with two little girls when very young, had made a brave fight to educate her children. Alice had been a wonderful help with the housework and sewing, and later with tutoring.

Things were looking much better for them now, as Mrs. Mangan had been offered a position as manager and designer of the dressmaking department in one of the large stores. She was taking a two weeks' rest that she very much needed. She had done dressmaking for years in the little rooms where she lived with her daughters and was weary of the drudgery of it. Louise, the younger daughter, was in her sophomore year in high school.

Alice, with her beauty and charm, had won the catch at the university. John Shuler's parents had come from a neighboring state for the graduation of their son, and Mrs. Mangan and Louise had managed to scrape together enough money to go and meet Allie's intended husband and his family.

Everything had been so pleasant. Life looked very bright for them all—and now Allie was worried.

Alice put down her sewing, grimly determined. "Mother, I have a plan and I hope you won't hinder me. It is this: You know the charming Mrs. Fred Merton who lives in that pretty house on the corner of Eighth and Pleasant streets?"

"Yes, dear."

"She needs a maid and I have decided to ask for the place. Now wait until I tell you my plan. I can work for her for two months before my wedding. John isn't coming here until then. That will give me some real money for my trousseau, and you can have my things made in your shop. I can learn how things should be done. The house is about the size of the one I am to live in in Oxbridge, and she keeps one maid and has a laundress come in. Just exactly as John and I planned for ourselves."

"But—wouldn't John and his family be horrified at your working as a servant?"

"They will never know," declared Alice. "I shall give another name. I am used to work and I shall ask questions and learn a lot. You know, Mrs. Merton belongs to one of the best families and always does the proper thing."

"If it were any one else, dear," said the mother, "I would think it a good plan; but I hate to think of you doing a servant's work."

"It is the kind of work that thousands of women do in their own homes. Besides, I wouldn't be a servant; I would only take the place of one for a few weeks, and I need the money as well as the knowledge. Oxbridge, John's home town, being a small place, goes in hard for society parties all the time, and they dress more there than in a larger place.

Boxing Day in England.

Boxing day is little known in America, but its observance is general in Great Britain. It is the day after Christmas day, and is observed as a holiday, Christmas being reserved for religious observation. A feature of the day is the giving of gifts by employers to employees. These are called Christmas boxes.

Christmas Joys.

We get most of the enjoyment of Christmas out of the dreams that come before and after. Oh, to dream of it before it comes, to enjoy it while it is here, and to appreciate it when it has gone!

Pierrette Comes to Town

By LILY WANDEL

(©, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Boo!" The kitchen door flew open and a very pretty brown-haired, olive-skinned girl, suitcase in hand, laughed herself into the room.

Aunt Marcia, just removing a cake of fat from a bowl of cold broth, dropped her spoon and gasped: "Pierrette! You here, my dear child. You should have written or—"

"You darling old slow-poke!" kissing the surprised and somewhat annoyed lady on both cheeks. "Don't you know that it's half the fun to just swoop down on people and surprise them! Why, if you had seen your face when I opened that door! Purposely I came up the alley and through the back yard; I knew you'd be in the kitchen!"

"But, Pierrette, really you should have let me know; you see—"

"Oh, Aunt Marcia, you ought to know me by this time. I never tell people when I'm coming. Don't you know, last year when I came unexpectedly and you were going away and had to postpone your trip? It didn't really make the slightest difference that you started three days later."

"Yes, yes; but this time it's different. We—"

"I won't be the least bit of trouble; not a bit! Let me explain. You see, really and truly, I did not have a chance to write and announce myself formally. The Evanses are stopping at the Belfonte and just begged me to take a trip to town; they know a lot of people and it will be just one continual string of good times! No, not a word of objection! I'll be out for nearly every meal, you see. I won't be any trouble."

"Pierrette! You Here!"

"Nevertheless, my dear," began Aunt Marcia, desperately, "you should have written, because—"

Pierrette smothered her with a kiss. "I see that I must take you into my confidence. Listen, you know last month I was at the Evanses' house party and, Aunt Marcia, I met the loveliest man, Dr. Edgar Warner. Oh, auntie, I can't tell you, but somehow I know that if I don't get him I don't want any other man. I'm almost sure he likes me very much, but do you know Clem Evans' cousin, that tall girl who is perfectly stunning? Well, she's trying her best to get him, and when Clem wrote me that Elsbeth was in town and gaining headway with Edgar Warner, I thought it was high time for me to pack my suitcase and take the next train."

"I am very sorry for you, my child, but it is quite your own fault. I told you last year not to do it again, this dropping in without notice. You see—"

"Where's Katie?" Pierrette had opened her suitcase and was shaking out two pretty dresses. "I must have these pressed at once."

"Katie left two weeks ago, and furthermore, you won't need those georgette dresses at all. If you'll stop chattering and listen—"

"You're much mistaken, Aunt Marcia. If you refuse to have me here I'll simply go to a hotel. I—"

"You won't leave this house, Pierrette Melville," seizing the girl by the shoulders to obtain her undivided attention. "We are quarantined! Timothy and Pet have the scarlatina, and though they are out of danger, the board of health is dreadfully strict here."

The georgette dresses slipped unnoticed to the linoleum and Pierrette flopped on the next chair unable to speak.

"If you had telegraphed I could have warned you, or if you had come in at the front door you would have noticed the placard. As it is, make up your mind for a month's stay. I do need some help, and I guess my house-dresses will fit you fairly well."

"Aunt Marcia," in a pitiful voice, all the gay spirits flown away, "is it really true? Can't I possibly sneak out some way? Oh, why did I come?" And after a few moments' uncontrolled sobbing, "Auntie, who is your doctor? Not by any chance Doctor Warner?" A faint hope sparkled in the lovely brown eyes.

Aunt Marcia placidly seasoned the soup. "I never heard of the man. My family physician is old Doctor Greely."

Pierrette stumbled upstairs to Aunt Marcia's spare room and flung herself, without regard to the crocheted bedspread, across the bed, a hopeless, sobbing bit of humanity. The dream was over, she had lost, and the beautiful Elsbeth would win. Had not Clem written: "You had better hurry here, because Elsbeth is making an awful hit with Edgar. He's taking her everywhere and they're always dancing together."

A miserable week dragged itself to a close. The weather had been lovely. Pierrette could imagine the delightful motor trips Edgar Warner and Elsbeth were having, while she, in Aunt Marcia's clumsy, slate-colored house dress, carried up trays and measured out medicine and what not! Old Doctor Greely, stout and red-faced, puffed in and out of the house once a day; that was the only break in the dreary routine.

If Aunt Marcia felt sorry for her niece, she certainly did not show it, and Pierrette decided she was cold-hearted and unsympathetic.

One morning, however, putting the patients' bed in order, Pierrette stopped and listened. Surely, Doctor Greely had a very light foot this morning, not a wheeze out of him as he climbed the stairs. Then an explaining voice, very deep but boyish: "Miss Grey, I hope I will do as a substitute; Doctor Greely's asthma prevented his coming; I'm Doctor Warner!"

His eyes opened very wide when he saw who the nurse was. No wonder, thought Pierrette, for what a sight she must be in Aunt Marcia's horrible dress, a mile too big!

"I heard that you were going to join the Evanses, Miss Melville," remarked the young doctor politely, "how—"

"My doing," said a brisk voice. Aunt Marcia stood in the doorway. "I telegraphed for her, and of course, my Pierrette came at once to help take care of these little people."

It seemed to Pierrette that if Doctor Warner had greeted her with careless politeness there certainly was a different tone in his voice when he left, something of admiration and keen respect.

The next day Doctor Warner asked Aunt Marcia if she did not think the nurse a little pale, and that a spin through the park just what she needed. After that Pierrette had a drive every day with Doctor Warner, and though Timothy and Pet were sitting up the doctor often found it necessary to run in again in the evening.

"Good-by," said Pierrette a few weeks later when the quarantine was lifted. "You darling Aunt Marcia, I must thank you for all my happiness. Perhaps you've guessed, have you? We're engaged. When I mentioned Elsbeth to Edgar, he said 'Beautiful stunning girls do not always do the big, fine things in life that count,' and he said that a girl who would give up a round of gayety to nurse scarlatina was the right wife for him!"

"I hate to go to John with a miserable wardrobe. He wouldn't care—the dear—but for his sake I want some clothes and some social knowledge. I can learn more in the short time I shall be at Mrs. Merton's than in years later—besides, I shall be saved the embarrassment of making mistakes."

"Oh, dear!" said Mrs. Mangan, looking bewildered.

"Be a sport, mother, and we'll enjoy this secret together. We've lived so secluded here in these little upstairs rooms that no one pays any attention to us. Mrs. Merton has never seen me, although, being so popular, I have seen her and heard a lot about her, too. Please, mother."

"Very well, Allie. I am almost enthused."

"I shall go at once and apply for the place," said Alice as she planed on her hat.

Alice came back beaming with enthusiasm. "I start tomorrow and Mrs. Merton is a dear. I told her I was inexperienced except in plain cooking. She will show me everything for a week. Then I will know the routine."

Alice returned every evening and told her mother and Louise of what she had gained in knowledge. She kept a notebook.

"Just think," said she, "I didn't know how a table should be set; nor where to seat the guest of honor, and these are important things to know. I am taking down the names of the kinds of china the Mertons have.

"Then, too, Mrs. Merton is chairman of the art department in the woman's club, and she told me a lot of things that they study. For instance: I know, now, that I know nothing about pictures and I know John doesn't; so we won't have any pictures in our house until we learn something about them."

"You have the rest of your lives to select pictures," said Mrs. Mangan, "so I think you are wise there."

"Mrs. Merton is going to borrow some of the papers that members of the class have written and let me read them. Then I have access to all her art books. My notebook is nearly full now and I have been there only five weeks."

"And your clothes are going to be lovely," said Mrs. Mangan, happily.

"I think you're the cleverest thing, Allie," exclaimed Louise.

"And I am not working any harder than if I were home. I have more money for clothes and all this housekeeping knowledge besides. Then, too, I shall know how to manage a maid—know how she should dress, wait on table and answer the door. I feel equal to my beautiful home now."

The 5th of September and Alice's wedding day arrived. John came with his parents and met the bride with Louise, the bridesmaid, and their mother at the church. There was a beautiful though simple wedding and no reception afterward.

The bride in going-away gown and hat left with her husband for the mountains immediately after the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Shuler left at the same time for Oxbridge. It had been a perfect day!

That same evening Louise remarked to her mother: "I shouldn't be surprised if Allie made John governor of the state some day."

"I should be more surprised if she didn't," calmly replied the mother.

The Fog-Muffled Sounds of Music.

If you had been unceremoniously hustled out of a beloved city and deposited in a furnished seashore cottage, left in a most disreputably untidy condition by its previous occupants; if for the first three days after your arrival it had fogged so persistently, insistently and consistently that the windows might as well have been blank walls; if you had nothing more interesting to read than a month before last's magazine, and nothing more inspiring to look at than a framed print of a Gargantuan mosquito biting the elephantine leg of an amazingly corpulent lady; if at intervals of :30 seconds the damp silence was broken by the dismal, prolonged wail of a fog siren; and if, to top it off, your last-but-returned and beloved soldier-husband to whose recently acquired passion for the open all these present miseries could be traced, had departed on a business trip which to you did not seem to be the least bit necessary, would you, or would you not, provided you are a young married woman, have done what Sally Anne did, I wonder?

When the time set by Jerry for his return came and passed without a word; after Sally Anne had opened the door at least 20 times peering in to the impenetrable wall of fog in vain, each time turning back to a more resentful contemplation of the fat lady's plump member, she plunged suddenly from the immaculate heights of a lifetime of the utmost correctness down into the depth of—attending, alone and unchaperoned, a public dance!

Fleeing desperately from her boredom, Sally Anne felt her way to the end of the little beach street and there took a trolley car a mile or so to a mammoth pavilion she had noted on the day of her arrival, where a great sign read, "Dancing Every Evening."

A long flight of steps led toward circles of blurred light, from beyond which came the fog-muffled sounds of music. Halfway up a ticket booth challenged. The tone of the man behind the grating was firm: "No ladies without escorts admitted."

A long arm reached over Sally Anne's shoulder, a bill was thrust through the opening. A deep voice said "Two." A hand grasped her elbow lightly and the same voice remarked pleasantly, "I'm so glad you came. Hurry and we can make this waltz."

Sally Anne loved to dance—and could. So could her partner, as she soon discovered. He was taller, much but in the creeping mist which sifted in at doorways and windows and through which the half hundred couples circled weirdly, it was difficult to get a clear impression of his features. That the tall man was a courteous gentleman was self-evident; the floor and the music were good. Aside from a few tweaks of conscience just at first, Sally Anne thoroughly enjoyed the evening. They danced much, sat out and talked some. The strange man, without giving a ghost of a hint as to his identity, mentioned his services overseas. He told some amusing experiences, incidentally referring to his top sergeant and often to his first lieutenant, but never calling them by name.

A couple nearby spoke of the hour, which was late. Hurriedly Sally Anne started up, saying she must go at once. Suddenly a full realization of what she had done came to her. Her escort walked silently down the steps beside her. At the bottom Sally Anne suggested nervously that he leave her there; she could get home safely. The tall man whistled sharply; a coupelet appeared out of the mist. "Take the lady to the address she gives you, Jerry," he ordered. Then he assisted Sally into the car, thanked her for a very pleasant evening, lifted his hat and closed the door.

The next morning dawned bright and sunny. To Sally Anne the fog and her dereliction of the night before seemed a dream. She preferred to think of them as such. But she couldn't help pondering a little as to who the tall man might be. He had not appeared to be any more familiar with the place than herself.

Jerry's cheerful signal whistle from down the street interrupted these thoughts before Sally had decided just how and when to "fess up" to her escapade. Of course she would do it sooner or later; she had never kept anything from Jerry yet, and she wasn't going to begin now.

Almost before the first hug and kiss were over Jerry sprung the news. His beloved captain was spending the summer nearby. It seemed they had just met at the station. "Blake's wife isn't here yet," Jerry explained; "she stayed in town to go to some social high-jinks—thought she was going to have a fine chance to show him off. Blake hates that sort of thing, so he skipped. They had some sort of tiff, I imagine. Guess that, or the fog or something got the old boy's goat, because he told me about going up to that big public dance hall last night. Picked up some fair mystery and danced with her all evening—said she wore a wedding ring and didn't act as though she were used to being out alone. That sort of thing isn't in Blake's line usually."

Sally Anne thanked her lucky stars that Jerry couldn't see her face. She didn't reply. "How would you like it if I did a thing like that?" Jerry asked.

"How would you like it if I did?" counter-questioned Sally.

"That is a proposition I refuse to consider because it's inconceivable," replied Jerry in a voice he seldom used. "By the way, dear, I asked Captain Blake to lunch tomorrow—is it all right?"

"Is he a tall, dark man with a deep voice, Jerry?" Sally Anne's head was pressed close to her husband's coat lapel.

"Why, yes," answered Jerry puzzled.

"Then I think, Jerry, it's up to you to decide whether you want him or not."

"I don't quite get you, Sally." Jerry tried to lift the little head from his shoulder but didn't succeed. "I want you to like my captain; he's a mighty fine man."

"I do," half laughed, half cried Sally. "Oh, Jerry, you haven't an idea how lonesome I was here without you—in that awful fog. And then when you didn't come last night I thought you didn't care, and it seemed as though I should go mad without some one to talk to. And, Jerry, he talked a lot about his first lieutenant—and that's you though, though I didn't suspect it at the time; so it wasn't so horribly, awfully, impossibly, unpardonably wicked, was it? And he danced wonderfully, Jerry—and I love it so— and you never take me."

"Sally! Are you trying to tell me that you were Blake's fair unknown?"

"Yes," replied Sally Anne, bravely. "Can you forgive me, Jerry—this first and last time?"

"There's no room in my heart for blame, dear; it's too full of thankfulness that it was Blake's hands you fell into. If some bounder had insulted you! But it would have been my fault for bringing you here and then leaving you as I did. Guess I sort of forgot you weren't a soldier. Guess I need some reconstructing, dear, as a husband."

"But how about having Captain Blake here, Jerry?"

"Sure we'll have him. Blake's a man—a big man. His kind would understand. He'll know you just slipped on the fog."

Plants Have Eyes.

Most people are aware that potatoes have eyes, but how many know that certain common garden and wild flowers are similarly equipped?

The nasturtium, begonia, clover, woodsorrel and bluebell, among others, have eyes placed on their leaves. They are tiny protuberances, filled with a transparent, gummy mixture, which focuses the rays of light upon a sensitive patch of tissue behind them.

A nasturtium plant has thousands of such "eyes" on its leaves, but it is not yet known if the plant can actually see. Are the sense impressions telegraphed to some central nerve corresponding with the brain of the animal kingdom?

In addition to this visual organ, many plants show a sensitiveness that points to further resemblance to animals; while certain seaweeds and mosses in an early stage of their existence are able actually to swim through the water.

MY DAILY PRAYER

To grow a little wiser day by day
To school my mind and body to obey,
To keep my inner life both clear and strong,
To free my life from guile, my hands from wrong;
To shut the door on Hate and Scorn and Pride,
To open, then, to Love the windows wide;
To meet with cheerful heart what comes to me,
To turn life's discords into harmony;
To share some weary worker's heavy load,
To point some straying comrade to the road,
To know that what I have is not my own,
To feel that I am never quite alone;
This would I pray from day to day,
As on I go upon my way.

Of Interest to People on the the Hilltop and Vicinity

Vol. 3. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, January 15, 1920 No. 30

NEWS HAPPENINGS

A special meeting of the Hilltop Improvement Association was held in the West Broad School Building, Wednesday night, at which a request was made for all Hilltop people interested to be present to discuss as to the location of a new school building on the Hilltop. A report of the meeting will be given next week.

Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stewart, will celebrate, in a very quiet way, their silver wedding anniversary, on Friday, January 16th, at their home, 99 S. Ogden Avenue. Mr. Stewart, who is manager of the Hilltop store of the Carlile & Kerr Co., is also enjoying his silver anniversary year in the service of the company, having begun his connection with the same on August 7, 1895.

Mrs. J. W. Barnes spent the last two weeks in Cleveland with her daughter, Mrs. H. J. Juengst, who is ill with quinsy.

Dr. W. S. Murray attended the funeral last Friday of Mr. B. P. Sprague at Athens, Ohio.

Seiller Bros. are building a 20-foot addition to the mezzanine in the rear of their store room, which will give them then about 300 more square feet capacity.

Harold Clark Brush, of Covington, Ky., has returned to his home after spending the holidays with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Clark, 79 N. Park Avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley C. Jett, 148 N. Warren Avenue, gave a dance New Years' eve. Mr. Jack Evans and Mr. Fred Taylor sang, "All of No Man's Land is Ours," which was accompanied on the piano by Mr. Fred Taylor. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Joe Otto, H. Wilson, Fred Taylor, Bert Haynes, the Misses Ruth Stiles and Bessie Bumgardner, Messrs. Frank Schinberger, Blain Prichard and Jack Evans.

Mr. and Mrs. Marion H. Stoner, 59 S. Ogden, announce the birth of a son, William Richard, December 23. Mrs. Stoner was formerly Alma Wehrle.

There will be a special ten minute talk on law and order and the majesty of the law at 9:15 promptly next Sunday morning in the Glenwood Baraca class room.

The Second and Third Divisions of Glenwood Ladies' Society will give an oyster supper, Thursday evening, January 22, from 5 to 8 o'clock price 35c. Come and have a sociable time.

A Message to Autoists

Do you know that it takes three to four days to retread a tire the "BETTER WAY" or in other words, the factory way?

Do you know it takes about two hours to retread a tire the PATENTED or pasted way? Which do you prefer?

The tread that is guaranteed to go 3500 miles or the one that will go 30 minutes maybe.

Look over your old tires, bring them to us now before the rush season begins and let us advise you as to the work to be done and make us prove to you that the Wy-Mar "BETTER WAY" is surer.

We will put new life in those old carcasses and won't use monkey glands, either.

Come in and see just how the work is done and you will readily see why it pays to have them done "THE BETTER WAY."

Watch for our Ad next week
It is Valuable.

Hilltop 1920 Diary

By TOP. O'HILL

January 8th, Hilltop fire department made its second run of the year to a Hilltop call, 146 S. Eureka, where a small fire was caused by a leak in a gas stove. The first call of the year was January 4th, a chimney at 224 S. Ogden.

January 9th, Mr. John Murnan an aged Hilltop resident passes away on account of pneumonia. Heaviest snow of the winter on the ground this morning. Street car and railroad traffic delayed considerable. Waited at Highland and Broad switch till three street cars, four autos and a yellow dog passed before proceeding westward.

January 10th, Street cars still going in "flocks" today. Some warmer. The census enumerator making calls on Hilltop. Did the weatherman cause you to break off your New Year resolution? It's none of our business, though.

January 11th, Burgess Avenue U. B. Church held all-day service. Highland Avenue Friends Revival still going on.

January 12th, Cold morning. Coasting fine. Hilltopper cranking his auto said he put on lighter "skid chains" and he guessed the "old boat" took a cold, 'cause all it does when he turns the crank is "coff, coff, coff."

January 13th Special Meeting of Hilltop Improvement Association at W. Broad School to discuss new school building on Hilltop.

Beans Would Not Cook.

Commander O. C. Dean, who retired last spring after many years' service as the Hood River-White Salmon ferryman, declares that he and a party of deer hunters in eastern Oregon nearly starved because they could not boil beans at a high altitude. "We expected to feed chiefly on venison but a bag of beans was taken along as a reserve," he said. "It fell to my lot to cook the beans. We camped away up about a mile elevation and I cooked and cooked and cooked those beans. The water boiled merrily, but it never got hot enough to soften those beans."—Portland Oregonian.

Why Some Teeth Are Preserved.

"The reason that the front lower teeth rarely decay and often last through life when all the other teeth have gone," said Dr. C. De Witt Henry of New York, "is that they are always bathed in an alkaline solution.

"It is the acids of the mouth that make the teeth decay. The salivary glands in the cheeks pour out a slightly acid fluid, those situated under the tongue pour out an alkaline fluid. The back teeth are constantly bathed in an acid and therefore decay first. The lower front teeth are so situated that the alkaline secretion from under the tongue floods them and preserves them from decay."

Appreciate Cucumbers.

In Cairo and Alexandria, Egypt, cucumbers are truly appreciated. They are developed to their utmost and are much eaten and liked by the natives. Moreover, the beautiful women understand the value of cucumber juice, and it is squeezed from the vegetable for them to use as a lotion for the skin.

The President of the Cambrian Glee Club is Hayden Jones, who is a brother of Tom Jones, manager of the West Side Lumber Co., and it is through his efforts together with that of Mr. and Mrs. Cliff Kohn, the Hilltop undertakers, who has also some relatives in the chorus that this concert was made possible. The club consists of thirty-two voices (all male). These young men have been giving concerts for the past two years through northern Ohio and Indiana. The most of them are natural songsters being sons and grandsons of the once famous Venedocia male chorus who in their day had a national reputation, so pleasing has their concerts been, that they have been called back to the same town time and again. This promises to be the most pleasing event of the season.

City firemen will begin, on February 1st, the new working method of 24 hours on and 24 hours off. This will require about 100 additional firemen for the city department. In case of accident a fireman receives a pension fund of from $1200 to $1500. He also gets 15 days vacation each year after one year's service. Application for position in the department can be made either at the City Hall or at the various engine houses. Examination is held each Friday at 9 A. M.

There will be a meeting of Mrs. Swigert's S. S. Class at the home of Grace Curran, 29 N. Wheatland Ave., on Tuesday evening, January 20th. Every member of the class is invited to come and bring a new member, if possible.

Friday, January 16th, ought to be remembered as commemorative of one of the greatest victories the United States has ever seen—the passing of the legalized saloon from our borders.

Election of officers took place at the last meeting of the Hilltop Embroidery Club, at the home of Mrs. C. J. Randall, 88 N. Terrace Avenue. The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. P. G. Ganta; Vice-President, Mrs. Denny Wells; Secretary, Mrs. C. J. Randall; Treasurer, Mrs. W. Rankin; Press Reporter, Mrs. T. E. Fox. The next meeting of the Club will be held next Wednesday evening, January 21 at the home of Mrs. W. K. Merriman, 184 S. Eureka Avenue.

Mrs. H. H. Carlisle, of 64 N. Harris and Mrs. E. B. Sloan, of Camp Chase, were called to Xenia Saturday by the serious illness of the formers sister, Mrs. H. B. Smith.

Mr. Burt Griffin, 141 Martin Ave., Captain of the Fulton Street Engine House, has a Caloric furnace in his ten-room home. Prior installed it.

Mr. George Ende, of Galloway, had "The Prior Hardware Co." install a Caloric Furnace in his country home, during the summer, and he is now very much pleased with the comfort it affords.

Prayer meetings each Thursday evening at 7:30 P. M., until further notice at 121 N. Park Avenue. Bible reading Thursday evening, January 15. Tille the Victory Life.

at the

West Broad Street School Auditorium

Under the Auspices of the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church

We are very glad to announce to the lovers of song on the Hilltop, that we have been able to secure the VENEDOCIA GLEE CLUB to give us a concert. This club will be in our city the night before giving a concert at the Ohio State University, and have been persuaded to stay over another day. The seats will be 40 cents and will be for sale by Mr. C. J. Kohn at the Hilltop Undertaking Co, after Wednesday of this week. All seats will be reserved. We consider it a rare treat to get to hear a chorus of this size and reputation for so small a sum. These boys, thirty-two in number, are given a royal reception everywhere they go. The capacity of the auditorium is limited and we expect the seats to be all sold in a very short time. If you want to hear this chorus we advise you to get your seats soon. All seats will be reserved.

THE STRAP-HANGER

Strap hanging causes bias, but not in favor of the strap.

The best way to be in favor of an increase of fare is to ride in your own automobile.

The West Broad Street cars are fond of going in flocks, whether for mutual protection or company we do not know.

Crowd up close "take up the slack" as railroaders say. It will give a seat to just one more as there are not straps enough to go round.

Won't it be fine when Broad Street bridge is opened for traffic, Victory Park is complete, and the improved street car service is effected to the Hilltop?

Our Senior and Junior Councilmen now have a good chance to put in two good words for the West Side, whereas before we could only get one.

Victory Park would be a good location for the Soldiers' Memorial. Let's boost it.

The Hilltop is the best place to live in the city and with the public improvements now under way, it will become increasingly attractive.

Let's help the Record to keep pace with growth on Hilltop.

The third number on Lyceum course at Glenwood was a huge success. Alton Packard is a unique combination of seriousness and frivolity; of pathos and wit.

The strap hanger is in favor of the skip-stop systems and any other means by which the schedule of each car can be shortened and service generally improved. What do you say?

GERMANY UNDONE BY OWN WEAPON

Had Sold to America Secret of Making Explosive From Air.

BIG NITRATE PLANT RESULTS.

Built in Eight Months It Convinces Kaiser of His Defeat.

By GARRET SMITH.

One of the most romantic passages in the secret history of the World War is the story of how the Ordnance Department of the United States Army made it possible for America, until then utterly lacking in ammunition and in facilities for making it, to manufacture unlimited quantities of powerful explosives out of air and rock. It was largely the knowledge of this fact that forced Germany to surrender when she did.

The secret was secured from Germany herself. It was an open business transaction between business men, whereby we apparently acquired nothing more military than a process for making a high grade fertilizer known as cyanamid.

Frank Sherman Washburn, head of the group of business men who bought this process, conceived the germ of the idea in the early nineties while in South America as consulting engineer in connection with the production and shipping of Chilean nitrate of soda. Nitrogen compounds are an essential part of all commercial fertilizers. The only available natural nitrate deposits in large quantities are in Chile. This supply was diminishing. Germany, which had been taking about one third of the Chilean nitrates, was already experimenting with processes for their artificial production. In 1907 Mr. Washburn secured in Germany the American rights of the cyanamid process which had been invented in that country.

Turning Air Into a Weapon.

By this process air, which is a mixture of about four-fifths nitrogen gas and one-fifth oxygen, is placed in containers and subjected to pressure and cold until it turns to a liquid. Then the nitrogen is distilled in much the same manner as alcohol is separated from water. But before this nitrogen can be used as a fertilizer it must be combined with a chemical combination of lime and carbon known as calcium carbide, produced by burning ordinary limestone in big rotary kilns and combining it in the electric furnace with carbon supplied in the form of ordinary coke.

Cyanamid thus produced contains the elements of ammonium nitrate, one of the most powerful of modern explosives. By one process ammonia is extracted from the cyanamid. By another process nitric acid is extracted from another batch of this same cyanamid. Then the ammonia and nitric acid are combined and there you have ammonium nitrate ready for packing into shells with TNT.

There are three kinds of explosives used for bursting shells in modern warfare—TNT, picric acid and ammonium nitrate. The United States was equally deficient in raw materials and plants for manufacturing all three of these explosives. Under the best of conditions the cost of either TNT or nitric acid is about two and one-half the cost of ammonium nitrate. But the United States was wholly dependent upon Chilean nitrate of soda as a raw material for ammonium nitrate, with the exception of a small production of nitrogen from the coking of coal. The Chilean supply was 4,500 miles away from New York City by way of the Panama Canal, and the route by way of the Straits of Magellan is nearly twice as long.

A Record Building Operation.

Shortly after the war began in Europe the German government entered into the fixation of air nitrogen for military explosives on a vast scale. It was not, however, until the fall of 1917 that the United States government took it up.

The Ordnance Department asked Mr. Washburn's company to organize a subsidiary corporation, known as the Air Nitrates Corporation, with Mr. Washburn as president, to act as agent of the government for the construction and operation of the air nitrates plant at Muscle Shoals, Alabama. This corporation provided the designs, erected the equipment in the chemical plants and supervised all the other work. It also operated the camp, the town and the plant. Other work is sublet to several of the best known organizations in the United States. Westinghouse Church Kerr Company built the plant buildings, the camp, the permanent city and utilities. The J. G. White Engineering Corporation designed and built the nitrate acid plant. The M. W. Kellogg Company furnished the piping and built the chimneys. On February 16, 1918, ground was broken, and eight months and eight days later the $60,000,000 Muscle Shoals plant began producing ammonium nitrate. In that brief period 12,000 men had completed the plant and around it, where not a house stood before, had arisen a city of 25,000 inhabitants.

This plant when in full operation was ready to provide 13 per cent of all explosives to be used by all the allies on all the allied fronts during the expected spring drive of 1919.

Why spoil your cellar with a lot of pipes when you can heat your house with a Caloric Pipeless Furnace.

A Spinning Top.

A spinning top is kept from falling because of the speed with which it revolves. The attraction of gravitation is temporarily overcome by the centrifugal force produced by the rotation of the top when it is spun. Each part of the top is subject to the same centrifugal force as each other part at the same distance from the axis of rotation and to no greater force, so that there is no cause for the top being pulled in any particular direction by the force of gravity. As soon as the centrifugal force begins to lessen because of lessening speed of rotation the attraction of gravity begins to be exerted again and the top begins to wabble. When the spinning motion diminishes to such an extent that the attraction of gravity becomes greater than the centrifugal force the top falls to one side.

Remember the word Caloric stands for heat comfort.

RECIPES

Minced Meat on Toast

2 c. meat; 2 c. sauce; 1 tsp. extract of beef.

Take the lean part of left-over roast beef and chop finely or grind with the coarse grinder. Add enough water to make proportion of 1 cup of sauce to 1 cup of meat. Add left-over gravy and extract of beef. Stew a little while, season and thicken to the consistency of medium sauce. Pour over toast, or put toast sippet around the dish.

Meat Pie

Cut the lean meat from cold roast in coarse pieces and stew in water to cover until tender. Season nicely and thicken to the consistency of medium sauce (add extract of beef or left-over gravy for flavor.) Put meat and gravy in baking dish and cover with biscuit crust. Bake in hot oven until nicely browned, about fifteen minutes.

Sauted Meats.

Cooked meat (cold roast, pot roast, or meat roll) cut in medium thick slices, dipped in egg and crumbs, and browned. Served with chili sauce or ketchup.

Escalloped Meat.

Take lean part of left-over meat and chop fine, add water to moisten and extract of beef for added flavor. Put in a pudding dish, cover with mashed potatoes, leaving the surface rough, and brown in the oven.

The Jade Earrings

By IZOLA FORRESTER

(©, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

They were curiously made, two pendant balls of delicate silver filigree, and within each a sphere of jade in deepest, purest sea green.

Mrs. Lambert watched them with a certain fascination as they dangled from the ears of her caller. There was the same shade of green in Wanda's eyes, the same suggestion of finished craftsmanship in her entire makeup, from her perfectly fitted walking boots to her straight, dark eyebrows and smooth, glossy hair. She hardly caught what the girl was saying until she realized that Oliver was observing her amusedly.

"I never want to see the far East again. I feel as if I had had some awful overdose of one of their queer narcotics. We were in Siam for two months, and after that China, and then Japan. Oliver says he never knew before the happy, happy heathen could use so many lead pencils."

"Eighteen thousand in Seoul alone on one order," grinned Oliver. "I have no kick coming. It isn't everybody who can run a successful honeymoon on a business basis."

"Successful!" Wanda shrugged negative shoulders. "I hardly saw anything of you, you were chasing customers so. It was fearfully slow for me."

"Until you struck Yokohama," Oliver put in meaningly. "She keeled over one of the highest mandarins in the province, sis. Regular princelet; educated at Harvard, finished at Oxford; regular diplomatic chap, with the finest pearl and jade business in southern China."

"He gave me my earrings," Wanda said, consciously blushing. "Don't you think they're pretty, Louise?"

"Exquisite. I was admiring them."

"I'm going to have them filed off of her ears;" Oliver rose and crossed over to the willow chair in the sunlight, looking down at his bride critically. "Did you notice, Lou, Mong Soy did her the honor of adjusting them in her ears himself, and there's a trick about the fastening. She hasn't been able to take them off since we sailed."

"And they hurt just a little bit," Wanda complained prettily. "He told me they would bring me luck. They're not Chinese. They were made in Burmah."

Save for admiring the earrings, the matter slipped from Mrs. Lambert's mind completely in the weeks that followed. She only saw her brother and Wanda occasionally, as they lived in town at a hotel, while she had her country home out at sleepy little Snug Cove, on the North Shore. Then one morning, about four, the telephone bell rang sharply. It was Oliver's voice in quick distress.

"Wanda's been taken very ill. Can you drive right in, Lou? Looks like poisoning."

"From what?" she asked anxiously. "Can you tell?"

"Not a sign of anything. She's not been well since we saw you last—slow fever, listless, uneven respiration, everything. I'm worried sick over her. Hurry up."

He had two specialists working over Wanda when Mrs. Lambert arrived. The girl lay in a state of coma, emitting a deep tremulous sigh every now and then, and evidently suffering. After the men had left the room for the consultation, Wanda opened her eyes. Her hands lifted meekly, unsteadily to her ears.

"Take those things out," she whispered. "I know—"

She slipped back into the drowsy state again, the words dying in a deep sigh. On the dressing table was a manicure file, and without hesitation Louise lifted the jade pendant from one ear lobe and began filing at the slender silver wire that held it in place.

Working resolutely, she succeeded in severing both and drew the wires tenderly through the inflamed, purpling flesh. Oliver entered as she tossed the trinkets on the linen scarf, his eyes filled with apprehension.

"They can't detect a trace of anything," he began. "She's simply wasting away. What are you doing?"

In a glance he realized what she had done, and picked up the jade earrings. Examining them closely he gave a quick exclamation. The wires at one end branched into tiny, needle-pointed ends like antennae, and the larger wire which pierced the ears was hollow. As he held it a globule of moisture gathered, like steam on a glass.

"Look after Wanda," he said sternly. "I'm going to have this stuff analyzed. This seems to be one method the orient has of showing its appreciation."

The door closed behind him and Wanda opened her eyes. A shiver of dread passed over her as she saw the earrings on the stand beside the bed.

"It was my fault," she whispered, as Mrs. Lambert bent over her tenderly. "I love jewelry. I was nice to him just so he would give me some of the beautiful things he had, and then he hated me when I told him I was leaving China for home. I never thought he would be serious. He seemed like one of his own queer little ivory images—"

Her voice died away, as she slipped into a quiet, natural sleep. Oliver came back, his gray eyes keen and anxious. He leaned over the slender figure on the bed yearningly.

"We'll take her away, out into the country with you, Lou, and get this infernal, subtle poison out of her system. Doctor Rand seems to know what it is. He says it's an old trick of the Hindoos and Burmese, and a pet form of annihilating one's enemy by degrees."

"But you can reach out and punish this man surely?" exclaimed Mrs. Lambert. He smiled, brushing back Wanda's curls softly from her face.

"Too late now, sis," he said, "Mong Toy died while we were coming to 'Frisco. If it hadn't been for you, his little fuse of revenge would have burned out her life."

It isn't what you pay--
It's what you get—that counts

NEWS HAPPENINGS

That Have Taken Place on the Hilltop During the Past Week

As two trucks were preceding westward on Broad Street,. Wednesday morning, the front one stopped at the corner of Broad Street and Eureka, when the one following it slid forward into the front one, breaking the windshield ad injuring the driver whose name was Lewis. He was taken to Mt. Carmel hospital. He received a broken arm and was somewhat otherwise injured. The trucks were on their way to Cincinnati and belonged to the Hickey Construction Co.

The newly elected officers of Westwood Temple, Pythian Sisters, were installed on Wednesday evening, Jan 14, at Odd Fellows Temple, W. Broad St. Mrs. William Meyer, Past Chief. was the installing officer, assisted by Mrs. W. E. Dolby, Past Chief of Westwood Temple and Mrs. Bland of Demona Temple. Five candidates were also initiated into the mysteries of Pythianism, after which lunch was served. Visitors were present from Lemona and Clanthe Temples. All Pythian sisters are invited to attend our next meeting on Wednesday evening, January 28, which will be a social one.

ORA L. DOLBY, Correspondent.

At the meeting of the Columbus Retail Furniture Dealers' Association, Monday night, the annual election of officers was held and Mr. George C. Stewart, manager of the Carlile & Kerr Co. Hilltop store, was elected president for 1920. Mr. Stewart has been a member of the executive committee of that Association for the past three years, the last year being chairman of that committee.

The Hilltop Undertaking Co. had charge of the funeral of the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Martindale of Jackson Pike, who died at Mercy hospital, Sunday morning. Burial took place in Dublin cemetery.

An effort is being made for the holding of a chautauqua on the Hilltop next summer and it is hoped the efforts will be a success as such a series of instructive entertainment would, we believe be highly appreciated by our people.

All those who have signed the paper to have a chautauqua and also others interested are invited to be present at a meeting in Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church at 8 o'clock Friday evening, January 23. Arrangements for such will be made and matters discussed. For information call C. J. Kohn, secretary, Hilltop Undertaking Co., Hilltop 281 or Citizen 17882.

The Baraca and Philathea class will have a get together social, Tuesday evening, January 27 at 8 o'clock. All members are requested to bring their wives and husbands for a good social time.

The young men composing the chorus that will sing at the West Broad St. school house are all Welch from Van Wert county.

Mrs. Catherine H. Postle, age 69, widow of William Y. Postle, died of complications on Tuesday, January 20th at her home, 55 S. Harris Ave. Funeral Thursday at 2 p. m. with burial in the Galloway Cemetery. She is survived by two sons, two daughters and nine grandchildren.

Jonathan Bell, age one and one-half years, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Bell, 18 S. Oakley Ave., died January 14. He is survived by two brothers and three sisters. The funeral was January 16, with burial in Green Lawn by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Thelma Archer, age 5 years, died at her home, 168 Wisconsin Ave., Jan. 16. She was the twin sister of Elma Archer. She died of complications. Burial Saturday, January 17, by Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Mabel and Florence Dunn, Donald Garnett and Ascie Steele, spent Sunday in Orient with Mrs. Deckert, the grandmother of Ascie Steele.

Miss Edna Kuch, a student of the Capital College of Oratory and Music entertained the Mothers Council at the Broad Street Methodist church,

We are not allowed to sell tickets at the school house so you will have to buy at the Hilltop Undertaking Co., for the Venedocia Glee Club.

Without a doubt the best singing of male voices ever heard on the Hilltop, the Venedocia Glee Club will be at O. S. U., Monday.

The Baraca and Philathea classes of Glenwood church will meet for a social time at the church. Tuesday evening, January 27 at 7:30 sharp. The classes will be entertained by a discussion of the race problem from the standpoint of a Negro citizen of the Hilltop. A Negro quartet will furnish music. Refreshments served free of charge.

The following were entertained to a luncheon Tuesday at the home of Thomas S. Watson, 80 S. Eureka Ave., in honor of Mrs. E. P. Chenoweth, of Washington C. H.: Mrs. Chenoweth and son Lewis, Mrs. E. B. Hooper, Mrs. John Evans and son Robert, hostess and little daughter Katherine.

The Straphanger

Will strap hangerpleas e mail name and address to Record office? We will keep it confidential.—Publisher.

The vertical seat is not so bad on a poorly heated car.

Even the life of a strap hanger has its advantages. He is the only one who gets to read the ads. We know 'em all from "Uneeda Biscuit" to "Send it to Langs."

How do you like Lam(b)neck? It comes high.

I wonder how we arrive at the proper fare rate. Six for a quarter looks to be ample to the Strap hanger. That extra cent will provide an abundance of straps. No one can say that six for a quarter is not enough until it is given a fair trial. The Strap Hanger can suggest a very simple means by which the R. L. Co. could greatly increase its earnings with no increase in overhead expense.

Quite a little time would be saved and service would be improved by finishing the double track. That would prevent so many cars from turning back at Highland.

There are too many stops on the W. Broad line. The major part of the time is taken in stopping and starting the car. The same is true of the power.

Columbus street cars are the slowest extant, consequently Fords are popular.

The skip-stop system works no hardship on anyone. Just one more block to walk and you are repaid on your return and then think how much it saves in time and power. Ought to be able to shorten schedule one-fifth.

STRAP HANGER.

West High Football Banquet

West High Football team will be banqueted next Friday night at Elk's home. Mr. Frank L. Holycross of the Board of Education has taken charge of arrangements for the evening and is planning a program that will be highly enjoyed by all who will be there. West High has only been defeated in the city high school championship twice in the past five years, during that time they have scored 845 points to opponent 42. Mr. Holycross and other west side business men are proud of this record and are planning this program as a token of appreciation for the success of West Hi. He is here planning to sell 100 patron tickets at $5 each and 100 student tickets at $3 each to defray the cost of the banquet and purchase sweaters for the members of the team. Students and alumni can purchase tickets at Slater's Pharmacy.

Your money will be refunded if you are not satisfied with the singing of the male chorus.

New School Building for the Hilltop

The meeting called by the Hilltop Improvement Association at West Broad Street School building on Wednesday of last week was well attended and great interest manifest in discussing the location for the new school building soon to be erected on the Hilltop. Four members of the School Board, also Assistant Supt. Fullerton were present.

At the School Board meeting Monday night it was decided to close a deal with Joseph Shoene for a tract of land 391 feet wide and 960 feet deep on the south side of Sullivant Avenue between Richardson and Burgess Avenues, the consideration being $15,000. It is planned to erect a 16 room elementary building with all the latest modern equipment. The grounds also have ample room for an athletic field in connection.

This will relieve the overcrowded conditions of Highland Ave. and W. Broad St. buildings.

The board has also planned the improvement of Highland Ave. and W. Broad schools by building additions to them. The location for the new building will be an ideal one, as it will be in a new and rapidly growing neighborhood on the south side of the Hilltop and will afford relief to the hundreds of children who have been compelled to go a long way to one of the other buildings.

The funeral of Mr W. S. Rider, who met death by asphyxiation, took place Wednesday, at his home on Belvidere. Burial in Green Lawn.

Jan. Reduction Sale. Seiller Bros.

Miss Elsie Darlington Bainter left Monday for an extended business trip to California and Alaska, to be gone about six months.

At a meeting of the Columbus Retail Grocers Association Mr. Raymond Hauntz of the Hauntz Grocery Co. was elected as a member of the Board of Directors.

Trees of Sorrow.

The Persian "Trees of Sorrow" are so called because they bloom only at night. When the first star appears in the sky the first flower opens and as the evening advances more and more buds burst into bloom until the whole tree appears to be one vast flower. It has a delicate fragrance not unlike the scent of the evening primrose. As the dawn approaches the flowers begin to fade until by sunrise not a bloom is to be seen.

All St. Paul people please take notice: Whether you are an Intermediate or not we want you to join our crowd on Friday night and help us to bring our pennant back from the Paul Brown Rally at the Plymouth Congregational church. We have carried this pennant home twice and we don't want to lose it this time. Everybody come and I assure you that you'll not regret the trip. Call Rev. Smoke for any further information.

Hilltop 1920 Diary

By TOP. O'HILL

Jan. 16.—Heavy snow storm in the morning, turning to light rain later. Felt poetical syn.ptoms coming on:

Little snowflakes from afar,
Dropping 'round our trolley car.
Trolley car stuck on track—
Wish I had my ticket back.
Up the hill and home at last,
Little snowflakes falling fast.

Little snowflakes, white as chalk,
Dropping swiftly on my walk;
Little raindrops, snowflakes crush—
Presto-change-o, snowflakes slush.
Little shovel—n'our of time,
Little snowflakes, how sublime.

There, feel relieved. Hope a recurrence will not happen before Ground Hog Day anyway.

Jan. 17.—John Barlycorn, whom the Hilltop expelled years ago now expelled from good old U. S. A.

Jan. 18.—Much colder, gas low all over city. Sunday School and church attendance light.

Jan. 20.—Mrs. Catherine Postle, age 69, died of complications. Weather moderating, turns to rain. Very slippery.

Paper Day of the 2d and 3d Divisions of Glenwood Aid Tuesday, January 27th

All members and other take notice and everyone having papers they would like to give to the church, call Hilltop 17 or Hilltop 2363, and have papers tied on front porch by 9 a. m. on above date.

Hocking and W. Virginia Lump for immediate delivery, West Side Lumber Co, Hilltop 177.

Mr. C. R. Pepple has improved the interior of his wall paper store by better storage facilities also by swinging display racks which will better show off the different patterns of paper in stock.

Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Ulrey, left last week for St. Petersburg, Fla., to be absent for 25 days.

Mrs. Emma Flechart of Galesburg, Ill., is visiting with her siter, Mrs. W. H. Deems.

Jan. Reduction Sale. Seiller Bros.

Tuesday, January 27, 8:00 p. m.

at the

West Broad Street School Auditorium

Under the Auspices of the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church

We are very glad to announce to the lovers of song on the Hilltop, that we have been able to secure the VENEDOCIA GLEE CLUB to give us a concert. This club will be in our city the night before giving a concert at the Ohio State University, and have been persuaded to stay ovef another day. The seats will be 40 cents and will be for sale b yMr. C. J. Kohn at the Hilltop Undertaking Co, after Wednesday of this week. All seats will be reserved. We consider it a rare treat to get to hear a chorus of this size and reputation for so small a sum. These boys, thirty-two in number, are given a royal reception everywhere they go. The capacity of the auditorium is limited and we expect the seats to be all sold in a very short time. If you want to hear this chorus we advise you to get your seats soon. All seats will be reserved.

THE CALL THAT'S TO THEE AND TO ME

To preach the glad Word of Jesus our Lord,
To help you from sin to be free,
To lead in the work which belongs to the Kirk,
I am sure you can count upon me.

To hear the glad Word of Jesus our Lord,
To be a true witness and free,
To help in all work which belongs to the Kirk,
Let me feel I can count upon Thee.
That the work of the year shall bring us good cheer,
And labor a light task shall be,
We must clasp heart and hand and loyally stand,
While love-links shall bind thee and me.

Remember my friend that the aim and the end,
Of the life of the Christian must be,
To exalt the dear Lord and to scatter His Word,
To this sends He forth, thee and me.

Rev. J. F. Grimes.

PETER THE SWORDSMAN

Before Pentecost we see Peter prompted by the carnal spirit, in anger, cutting off the ear of Malchus the high Priest's servant, with a sword. After Pentecost we see him prompted by the HOLY SPIRIT, in love, cutting people to the heart with the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God—and 5000 accepted Jesus Christ as a result of his one sermon—in Holy Ghost power and love. The carnal spirit is ANGER, the HOLY SPIRIT is LOVE. The carnal spirit destroys soul and body. The HOLY SPIRIT saves the soul and body. Let Jesus come into your heart.

In all the history of the world no man has ever been able to produce a book that could give such comfort and hope in life and death as the Bible. Another fact is this that the best and most helpful books are those which refer most to the Bible and draw most directly from its exhaustless store.

The Dorcas Class of the United Evangelical Church will meet at the home of Mrs. McMurray, South Hague Ave., Thursday, February 5th. All members please be present.

The sorrow around the coffin many times is made to sting like heated arrows in the heart, and the tears scald furrows down the faces of the mourners. By the memory of the cross or unkind words spoken to the one that is now cold in death. Better speak kind words today and you will not have to repent tomorrow of those bitter, cutting, sarcastic words spoken in haste or anger.

"What is the meaning of false doctrine, Willie?" asked a Sunday school teacher.

"It's when the doctor gives the wrong stuff to a sick man," replied Willie. Selected.

Some years ago an insane man, in a New England town, rose from his seat in the midst of a large assembly, and seizing with a great deal of energy one of the pillars that sustained the gallery of the church, declared aloud that he was going to pull it down. Had another "Samson Agonistes" suddenly appeared, and declared himself ready to bow between the pillars of another of Dagon's temples, there could have hardly been a greater consternation. The people, amid the outcries, and faintings, and general confusion, yielded to the most foolish fears. Nor did they recover their self-possession, and quietly resume their seats, until another man, significantly pointing to the large and strong pillar which had been threatened, calmly said, "Let him try- let him try."

This proposition restored order and confidence at once, the house did not fall, and the services went on. And so, when men insanely threaten to pull down the pillars that the skill of the Divine Architect has reared and holds up, we are too easily moved with alarm, and too slow to consider the strength of the structure.

The skeptic, the scoffer, the blasphemer, the persecutor, boast of their power, and threaten to overturn Christianity, explode religion, confute the Bible, and introduce a new order of things. We have heard of such threats before. Let him try. Something has hitherto survived such assaults, and there may be some of God's work left after the devil has done his worst. If a man thinks to bombard Gibraltar with boiled potatoes, "let him try!" One who knew man in his weakness and his strength, has said: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Selected.

Prayer meetings each Thursday evening at 7:30 P. M., until further notice at 121 N. Park Avenue. Bible reading Thursday evening, January 15. Title the Victory Life.

A Ten-Cent Romance

By DORA MOLLAN

(©, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Horace Burdett might have had a dozen affairs of the heart—if. It was no lack of time that was responsible, for Horace was crowding forty-five very closely and he had a reasonable amount of leisure; nor yet that he was a mysogynist, for he was far from it. It was because he was that sort of man. Horace was not a heroic figure.

He was under the medium height; he was slender; his shoulders had early acquired a scholastic stoop; he was near sighted and had to wear spectacles at all times; from youth he had mistakenly fostered a mustache that never grew up, and nature had decreed that through life he should wear an expression of ingenuous gravity like a baby who watches another baby suck a caramel. And he was frightfully afraid of women.

Now Horace had his being in a large city. He gained his livelihood in an office where his services were appreciated and his hours short. He had occupied the same large alcove bedroom in a house presided over by the same landlady for many years. Thither he repaired every afternoon, with almost unfailing regularity, as soon as his business duties were over, for a freshening and a change of raiment before his walk and his dinner at the same old restaurant. And he always rode home on a surface car because he liked "L's" little and subways less.

He never sat while a lady stood—albeit, he never got over the habit of blushing as he surrendered his place.

Came a time when the great war took away so many of the men that the street car people put on women conductors.

Horace found some difficulty in adjusting himself to this new order of things. Women should lead more sheltered lives than making change for nouses and freshies and jingling the starting bell and levering open the rear door of a pay-as-you-enter car. But with a sigh he mentally admitted that General Sherman was probably right and that it couldn't be helped.

There were a great many cars on that line, and from day to day Horace encountered a variety of conductresses. He did not greatly cotton to them. Mostly they looked as though they asked but the shadow of an excuse to biff Horace or any other passenger of either sex in the eye.

There was one, however, whose car he frequently caught, on whom Horace permitted his thoughts to dwell more than a little. She was a serious-faced young woman with faraway eyes and probably a good figure under her shapeless uniform coat and puttees.

Horace noticed that somehow she managed to keep her hands clean, and he observed, with a tiny elation inside him, that none of the nouses or freshies ever got familiar with her.

Though she was not more than 5 foot 3, shorter even than Horace, she had a way of looking clean over the heads of the passengers. Horace finally figured it out that she was the wife of a soldier, away off overseas fighting for his country.

Horace was one of those people who always have the right change ready as they embark on a pay-as-you-enter. It's a poor rule that has no exception. One day Horace found himself, as he stepped into the vestibule of a home-going car, without a single nickel.

There was a dime, however, in his change pocket, and as he fished it out and handed it to the conductress he found himself facing a gray-eyed young woman. The conductress, without even looking at Horace, took his dime and handed him two nickels.

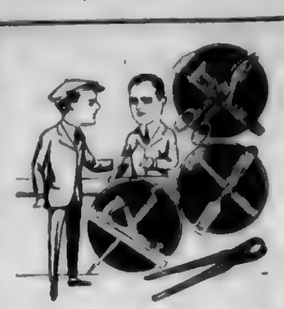
One of these he dropped in the car's rapacious glass maw, and was proceeding to a near-by seat, when he was arrested by the commanding voice of the conductress. "Here, you!" she called after him. "Come back here!"

Horace turned, to behold the young woman's hand held out to him with the tencent piece between thumb and forefinger and her eyes bent on him in blasting scorn. "Here," she said—and the whole carload might have heard—"take this thing back to the tin-foil factory. The company's quit collecting to educate an orphan!"

In utter confusion Horace automatically obeyed the peremptory summons. He took the dime from the extended hand and was confounded to see that it was a most palpable counterfeit.

"Why, er—er—I—that is, I assure you, madam—"

"Never mind about the assurances; just hand over a regular United States dime." The gray-eyed young woman was staring with cynical unsympathy into the embarrassed eyes of Mr. Burdett.



Somehow Horace managed to find a quarter, and after a critical look at it the conductress gave Horace fifteen cents and turned to pull the door lever for a departing passenger.

Horace Burdett was profoundly mortified. Never before in all his life had he been accused of dishonesty. But as he sat ruefully contemplating his own feelings he suddenly realized that he didn't care a hoot what the passengers thought of him.

What hurt was that this gray-eyed young woman, with a splendid husband overseas fighting for his country, should deem Horace an unworthy creature who passed counterfeit dimes.

Suddenly, as he covertly glanced at his accuser and caught sight of the metal number on her cocky little military cap, Horace remembered that he was well acquainted with the paymaster of the street car company, and a resolve came upon him.

Next day Horace found out from Strickland's office, by phone, that No. 1414's name was Kate Dorn and that she lived at a certain address in the

Azimuth-Ann

By M. McCULLOCH-WILLIAMS

(©, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Azimuth-Ann bore witness alike to her mother's ear for the unusual and her filial piety. "Maw, she wouldn't never git over it if thar wasn't Ann somewhars in baby's name," she had confided to her visitors. "But I do like names that sound tasty—Ann never was much to my mind."

So Azimuth-Ann toiled up the years, through croups, measles, school, first love and getting religion, weighted with her name. By the time she was nineteen it had shrunk in all mouths to Azan—the faintest pause after the A. Still it was sufficiently afflictive—all the more so that Granny, resenting Azimuth, had left her whole string of gold beads, no less her chain and locket, to little Ann, her next eldest grandchild. That was a shame—little Ann, dark-skinned and pale-haired, matched the heirlooms so ill. But since she had inherited also a fine farm, money in bank, also her dead father's thrift, the neighborhood did not say out loud she was homely—but thought it all the harder.

Azan was another sort—a gypsy beauty, with big black eyes and cheeks like a Jac rose. Graceful withal—her dancing was worth watching—walking she moved as lightly as the bird on wing. Bright things transfigured her. In her long, red coat and hat looped with gold braid she looked another creature than the slim girl in brown calico, somewhat faded, who came to the farmhouse door in answer to Milby's hallo.

Night was falling cold after a raw and gusty November day. Milby, an outlander, hopelessly lost in the hill country, had been genuinely relieved by sight of chimney smoke. Very shortly he found himself sitting beside a blazing log fire, his numbed hands resting in a pan of cold water, which Azan had fetched him, while a huddle of sturdy children stared at him from the opposite corner and exchanged awed yet audible whispers among themselves.

Wanted Them All to See Her New Finery.

Mrs. Betts, their mother, had laid her sewing across her knee, to engage in affable converse with the stranger. "Frum up no'th? How funny—whut could folks that lived in town, or handy by it, wanter come down in the hills for? Nothin' ter see, sir! Nothin' a-tall. To be sho, thar wus circuses once in so often down at the Cross Roads.' Father, he's up and said all the children might go next time. And next time was next week—actually them brats hadn't done nothin' much since they knowed it, but eat and sleep and talk erbout it. Yes—she was goin'—in spite o' belongin'—and the preacher not likin' of it over-well. The baby wasn't weaned, so he jest couldn't go onless his mammy did—and she didn't believe in bein' partial—not to big children nur little uns."

Milby agreed with her on every point, smiling to himself over the human comedy. His aching hands were eased, and as he put down the pan Azan bent from behind him, snatched it and darted away. But he caught a glimpse of her face, flushed, humiliated, scornful. It gave him a curious thrill—one that ought to have warned him to ride as a way before he was tempted to make love. It did no such thing. He stayed on over night, through next day's snowstorm, and the day after, crystal-clear but with a bitter wind. He had taken the whole family captive. The children ran over him, feeling in every pocket, playing with his watch, his knife, aghast over his pen—"the stick that made marks 'ithout dippin'," the three initialed handkerchiefs he had by good chance supplied to himself, most of all the ring upon his finger.

It touched him that the handkerchiefs had been abstracted while he slept, and laid back ere he awoke deliciously clean. It was the same with his socks—his shoes moreover were kept at mirror polish. Father, otherwise Jack Betts, a mighty hunter and indifferent farmer, often bore him company in the big room, where he slept in state, long after the others were in bed. Jack was no dullard, only a misfit pioneer, born a hundred years too late. He would have braved and conquered the real wilderness. Here in a stranded eddy of wild country, he was thwarted and stunted. But he did not know it—that made part of the tragedy. Milby saw that Azan was coming to know it—of her father, and of herself no less.

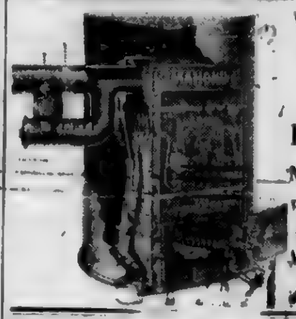
She had told him wistfully of the people "down on the river." They had bottom lands, fine hounds, fine clothes—even pianos. Little-Ann was of them—it was by visits to her Azan knew the difference. No, she was not going there again—no matter about reasons—it was just so. Then Mrs. Betts had explained, solely through the medium of significant nods and winks, which left Milby more than ever bewildered. But Jacky, the biggest boy, to whom Milby was little short of a demigod, said disgustedly in his ear, when the nodding and winking ended: "Maw thinks she's the slyest—but I bet you don't know now no more'n shucks what she's been tellin' ye—erbout Little-Ann hatin' Azan on account er Joe Heme. He runs the mill, down yander, and Little-Ann's mind is set on him—but ever gence he seen Azan—why he's been keepin' the path hot here.

"Oh, indeed! Joe, you mustn't tell family secrets!" Milby whispered back—and fell to looking at the fire, conscious that he was unreasonably angry, but not admitting to himself the reason for it.

The revelation had come Saturday afternoon late. Father was away, out hunting despite the snow. Milby ought to have gone with him, but had stayed behind. At dark the hunter came home, loaded with fur and feather, also evidently in high good humor. He said nothing outright, only hurried through supper, and after it put a half bushel of yams to roast. Then he made up the big room fire, chuckling hard as he did it. It was hardly in full blaze before the dogs howled in chorus, gay shouts rang above the howlings, and father, flinging wide the door, rushed outside saying over his shoulder to Milby, "You've done seen br snowstorm—now we'll show ye a storm of ernother sort."

Thus began the storm party—a dozen young men and women, with two fiddlers, who had aimed to take the household by surprise. Father had somehow got wind of it—hence the haste and the potato roast. He knew there were friedcakes and sausage enough for all already in hand; cider likewise, and coffee for the making. Proudly hospitable as he was thriftless, he joyed to see the crowd. Azan darted upstairs at the first sound of it and came down cloaked and hatted, saying with the most natural air of surprise, "Well, I am glad to see somebody about! Jest had thought I'd run down to Jenningses—but now of course I'll be mighty glad to stay."

Milby smiled covertly over the artless maneuver—she wanted them all to see her new finery. He had known before she was beautiful—now he understood what her beauty might mean to him. "I'll be back in two shakes of er sheep's tail," she called gayly, turning to go upstairs again. But a tall, handsome young fellow barred her way, saying humbly: "Come with me, Azan—you know you halfway promised. I thought it would be fine to steal ye frum yer folks—but by the Lord, I want to take ye boldly—in the face o'—everybody."



The fiddlers checked their tuning up—silence as of the grave fell everywhere. Even the shuffling children stood stock-still. Little-Ann, brave in her gold beads, her chain and locket, and a gorgeous blue gown, wrung her hands voicelessly, her dull face ashen. Azan turned about, her eyes starry, her cheeks like damask roses. "I cain't come, Joe," she said low but clearly. "I've been wicked—takin' you frum Little-Ann. I didn't know—nothin' about—love—then," the words coming hard. "Now—I know—it's worse'n a murderer. You go back to her. She deserves ye."

Animals That Blush.

In spite of the admiration expressed by poets for a blush, it is, after all only a rush of blood to the face, caused by modesty or some other emotion. Animals blush, too, through fear, but the poets say nothing about them.

Horses blush in their ears, especially the left one. When a horse is frightened his left ear will be found to be very much swollen. This is also the case with rabbits.

Cows and similar animals blush just above the hoof, while the dog uses his tail for this purpose. When a dog is frightened his tail hangs limp, as he has lost control over it.

Even insects blush. They do it in their antennae, or feelers.

At the breaking out of the civil war, a man in one of the Northern States was drafted into the service.

He had a wife and family of small children; when about ready to leave for the front, a young unmarried man came to him, and offered to go in his place, saying I am a single man, and have no one depending upon me as you have. Your wife and children need you, I will take your place and you remain at home and take care of your family. The substitute was accepted and left with the company for the front.

During the battle of Missionary Ridge, Tenn., the young man was killed, and was buried with the thousands of other brave boys in what is now the beautiful National Cemetery at Chattanooga. Years after the war closed, a man visited the National Cemetery and inquired for the grave of that young man; when it was pointed out to him, he knelt beside it and tenderly placed some flowers upon it, while the great tears ran down his cheeks, and he sobbed as one in the deepest sorrow. When asked if it was his father he answered, "no," then he was asked if it was a brother or a friend, and between his sobs he replied "He died for me. For years I have been saving to make a visit here and place some flowers upon his grave, for he died for me."

At Cambria, Wyo., we met a colored man that saved the life of Mr. K., one of the proprietors of the great coal mines; when he was being assaulted by a drunken miner this colored man stepped in and received the wound that was intended for the other man. As an expression of gratitude for the kind act, Mr. K. placed the name of the colored man on the pay roll, with a generous salary, also gave him a finely furnished room at the Company Hotel, where as long as he lives, all his wants and comforts will be looked after. "He was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon Him. He hath poured out His soul unto death, and He bore the sins of many, and with His stripes we are healed."

"hundreds." Also that she was through her work at 5:50. That evening, with his courage in his hands and a pocketful of documents, he called at the certain number in the "hundreds."

The Dorn apartment proved to be a very tiny one at the back of the house. His ring was answered by the gray-eyed young woman, who looked infinitely less impersonal and much more charming in a soft gray dress.

Horace was like a cold-water bather who dare not hesitate lest he flee altogether. He rushed into explanations: "Mrs. Dorn," he said the moment he made sure of her identity, "I gave you a counterfeit dime yesterday. Obviously, you believed I knew it. My name is Horace Burdett; I am employed by the third largest house in Wall street; I have a good salary and some property; I am a member of the Masons and the Elks. I have brought the papers to prove these statements and to assure you of my respectability. I have—really, Mrs. Dorn, I say it with the utmost respect, I assure you—I have greatly admired you and thought what a fine thing it was for a young woman to be working so heroically while her husband was fighting for his country. And I could not bear to have you think me a common cheat."

The gray eyes had expressed first amazement and then interest, and now the young woman laughed outright. "Why," she said, "I'm dreadfully sorry I was so snippy—but they do try it so often. I ought to have known, though, that you were not that kind. Anybody could see, at a glance, that you are—well, that you're a gentleman. But what made you think I had a husband in the war? I haven't—there or anywhere; I haven't anybody." The laughter had died away. "I just took that job because it pays better than anything I could get—and I'm crazy to save enough for a chicken farm."

Horace's heart leaped within him. Then and there he realized that he, too, was just crazy about a chicken farm. He said so.

"How lovely!" exclaimed Miss Dorn. "Do come in and talk about it."

Many marriages are predicated on a less solid foundation than a mutual interest. The Horace-Burdetts' chicken farm is the admiring talk of their New Jersey village. And the Horace-Burdetts—well, there certainly isn't a happier couple in that county.

GRASPED FAME AND FORTUNE

How Gardener on One Lucky Afternoon Achieved Both Highly Desired Possessions.

Here is an interesting story about the origin of that most beautiful of flowers, the American Beauty rose. The late Hon. George Bancroft, besides being a historian and scholar, was one of the first amateur rose growers in America. Every year he imported cuttings from the leading flower growers of Europe. The king of Prussia—when old Kaiser William was king—allowed the American historian to have a slip of whatever he might fancy in the royal conservatories. Mr Bancroft's gardener used to cultivate some of his roses in an old house away out on F, or perhaps it was G street, above Twenty-second street, in the West end of Washington, D. C. Mrs. Grant had a florist named Field in charge of the White House conservatory. He was a rose grower of rare merit and skill in his artistic work.

One day he happened into the old building where Mr. Bancroft's gardener potted his plants and budded his roses. Over in a corner he observed a rose of a variety utterly unknown to him and of wonderful size and perfection in form and color. "Where did this come from?" he carelessly inquired of his rose-growing confrere. "Oh, it is an offshoot from some cuttings we imported from Germany," the man replied. It was evident to Mr Field that the other did not in the least comprehend the value of the new plant. After some talk Mr. Field bought the cuttings he had seen for $5. A year thereafter, when he had propagated his new purchase and became convinced that he had a new and very valuable variety of rose, which he named the American Beauty, he sold his find for $5,000, the most wonderful result of the investment of $5 on record. To follow his luck a little further, Mr. Field invested his easily earned $5,000 in lands near Washington, which in a little less than three years were sold for $50,000. Truth is sometimes stranger than fiction.

Addition to World's Minerals.

A new mineral has been discovered in Siberia. The discovery was made by a hunter on the shore of Lake Balkash, and the mineral has been named balkashite. It has the appearance of dark brown rubber and when ignited it burns with a strong flame, leaving about 2 per cent ash. When placed in water it becomes a mass very much like paraffin.

How About Russian.

Johnny had been home from school with a bad cold, and when he returned to his lessons he took his teacher a note from his mother, saying: "Johnny is well enough now to do his work but please keep him out of the French class; he still has a sore throat and even English hurts him."—Boston Post.

Where the Grocer Was.

Doris' mother was in the habit of ordering her bread at Smith's grocery. One day while entertaining callers they heard Doris in the next room talking through her toy telephone, asking Central for Smith's grocery, when she called: "Mother, Mr. Smith isn't at home." "Where do you suppose he is?" replied the mother. Doris answered: "Why, he's up in heaven getting our daily bread."

THINK

There is plenty of light for the man who is not trying to hide some sin in his heart.

The man who is willing to obey God will soon find out that he has a God to obey.

The joy God puts into the soul is something the devil has never been able to take out.

There is something wrong with the religion of the man who is never seen at church on lodge night.

A clock that won't run is like a church member who never tells anybody by his life that he is religious.

The devil would have to quit business if he couldn't do most of his work in the dark.

Sometimes a man has to go a thousand miles away from home to be introduced to himself.

There are men who have a creed a rod long who do business with a short yard stick.

One of the things revealed in the Bible is that heaven is to be forever devil proof.

The man who knows in his heart that the Bible is true don't care what skeptics think about it.

Give some people the power to move mountains and they would soon ruin the farms of their neighbors.

The reason some people treat God worse than they do their neighbors, is because they think it is safer.

The man who insists that his pastor must have more religion than he is willing to have, is not on the way to heaven.

When a man is getting religion he don't think much of himself, and when he is losing it he don't think much of anybody else.

Without the knowledge of God's love, eternity could not produce a heaven that would satisfy human hearts.—Selected.

NEWS HAPPENINGS

That Have Taken Place on the Hilltop During the Past Week

On Tuesday evening, January 22, Mr. Pearl Wheeler, 239 S. Warren Ave., was very enjoyably surprised, the occasion being his birthday anniversary. The evening was spent in playing games. Those winning prizes were Miss Ruth Ellison and Miss Carl Fults. Those winning booby prizes were Miss Ruth Ellison and Mr. Theo. Davidson. They were also favored with vocal, violin and piano solos. Mr Carl Fults, a member of the Rainbow Division, sang several solos, one being the favored French song, "Madeline." Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Thea Davidson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fultz and children, Charles and Dick, Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Tharp, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Price, Mr. and Mrs. Bliss Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Wheeler, Misses Ruth Ellison, Mable Dunn and Florence Dunn, Messrs. Ocie Steele, Don Garnett, Carl Fultz, Orville Depreist and Mr. and Mrs. Pearl Wheeler and children, Vera Louise and Edna Berdine.

Mr. Marian S. Wells, age 62, died of heart failure at his home, 126 Highland Avenue, on Tuesday, January 27, at 9:30 a. m. The funeral took place Thursday at 1:00 p. m., at the residence. Burial at Mt. Sterling, O. He leaves besides his wife, one son, one granddaughter, three sisters and one brother.

Funeral services for Mr. Chas. P. Linke was held Tuesday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Chas. Frederick of 265 S. Harris Avenue. Burial was made in Greenlawn

The Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society of the St. Paul United Evangelical Church attended the Paul Brown Rally last Friday night at the Plymouth Congregational Church and brought back with them a banner for the largest attendance at the rally. This society has brought home a banner from each County Rally that has been held this winter. This society is not only increasing in numbers, but also in activities of the church. Sunday evening an Expert Endeavor class will be started, and any person who cares to join the class can do so, whether you are a member of this society or not. A half hour will be given each Sunday evening for this class, beginning at 6:30 p. m.

Jan. 26—Great excitement shortly after noon by somebody discovering "dry land" for the first time since it disappeared. Shovel brigade helping to strike more land.

Jan. 27—Venedocia Glee Club give a successful concert at West Broad School Auditorium.

Jan. 27—Death of Marian S. Wells.

TRADED GOATS FOR DIAMOND

South African Millionaire Tells of Good Bargain He Made in First Business Deal.

An amusing story is told in connection with the early days of Sir J. B. Robinson, the South African millionaire, who has been figuring prominently in the London law courts.

He was crossing the Vaal river in 1869, looking for diamonds. He asked the natives if they had seen any "pretty stones," and at last he found a man who had a diamond. It was a small stone, and the prospector offered $50 for it, but the man refused to sell it. He increased his offer to $60, but still the man refused.

"What will you take for it?" he was asked.

"Twenty goats," was the firm reply; "nothing less."

"I sent off to the nearest farm," says Sir J. B. Robinson in telling the story, "and bought twenty goats for $37.50, and so got possession of my first diamond."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Wonderful Love Story.

A great love story is the greatest story in the world. But was there ever such a story as that of Mme. Hanska and Balzac? Balzac and Mme. Hanska corresponded seventeen years before their lips met, before they married. The genius fell in love with her through her letters to him. She was the wife of a Polish nobleman and enormously rich. From her first note to him Balzac was in a frenzy of love. His letters to her are a literature. Balzac loved; madame was prudent. She had rank; he had debts and the divine fire. They met once in Switzerland in 1833. Husband Hanska died. Balzac charged upon St. Petersburg where Hanska was living. But for seven years madame fell back before the blaze of Balzac's love. At last she consented to marriage. Two months after marriage Balzac died. Madame outlived him thirty-two years. —Exchange.

Attention, Neighbors

We are a new institution in your midst, possibly not known by you and therefore we wish to make this announcement that you may satisfy yourself of the safety and cordial treatment which awaits you by our institution. Our business being strictly a banking business enables us to offer you any and all attention that you can secure in any up-town bank. We may mention that our Christmas Club with eight plans of saving is now open. Commercial checking accounts, drafts, self identifying certified checks and safety deposit boxes are at your disposal. The West Side is a city within a city and we are their only bank. Build us up and you are building up your holdings right at home. It is our aim to bring business from up-town over to us when the Broad Street Bridge is completed and expect the West Side people to come along of their own free will and accord, thus helping us in our undertaking. At this time when it is being urged and planned by our Mayor to take some of the business off of High Street Why leave it go East? The following men comprise the official staff of our company, if not acquainted they will be pleased to know you.

Interesting Social Affair at Glenwood

A delightful social was held in Glenwood M. E. Church, Tuesday evening, under the joint auspices of the Baraca and Philathea Sunday School classes. The subject discussed was, "The Race Problem." Mr. Charles Chavous, a well known negro officer from the Hilltop presented an able paper on this subject, which was listened to with great interest by the large company present. Several solos were sung by Messrs. Robert Good and Clyde Minor. The music was greatly enjoyed as these men were called back again and again.

After the program a delightful lunch was served by the ladies of the Philathea class. More than one hundred persons were served. It was indeed a very enjoyable occasion and all present expressed themselves as having enjoyed a very delightful and profitable evening.

Rev. W. O. Watson will teach the Baraca class next Sunday.

Comparison is the Only True Test of Furniture Value

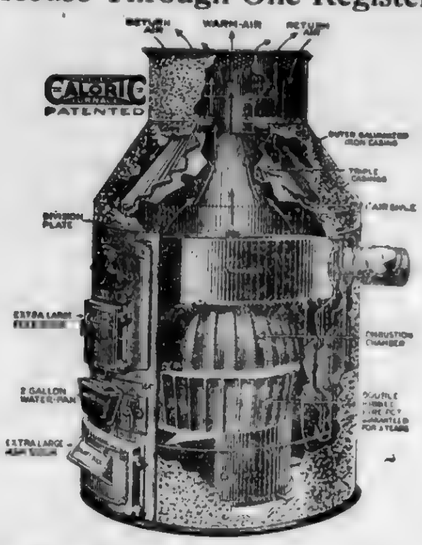
Every store is privileged to advertise that its prices are lower than others, but after all its the furniture on the sales floor, with the prices attached in "plain figures," that tell the true story.

How else can you feel absolutely certain of buying your furniture at the lowest prices, unless you actually investigate by comparisons?

WE SELL ON CREDIT

WE SELL FOR CASH

If we had the slightest doubt that our store would suffer by such a comparison, when it comes to VALUES and QUALITY, we would not urge you to compare our prices, etc., with other stores; but we know that if you will make a comparison, you will find that we are selling Furniture for much less money; and there is a reason—buying collectively with 32 large furniture stores, as one great jobber, which we do; and our own seven stores—five of which are in Columbus, all located out of the "high rent" districts enables us to offer you Furniture from the best factories in America at prices that mean a considerable saving to you. Either cash or credit.



We do not pay any commissions to solicitors, and do not offer "bonuses" or "premiums" to sell goods; but just give you every last penny's worth for each dollar you invest here.

Come and see for yourself. We'll welcome you, whether you buy or not.

SAVING THE HELPLESS

Four men were crossing the river when the boat was capsized and all were thrown into the water. A rescue party put off from the shore. A man who was standing on the bank became very much excited and shouted, "Save that red headed man, save that red headed man." When the rescue of all was completed the man on the bank was asked the reason for his special interest in the red headed man. He replied, "He owes me one dollar and a half." There are times when it looks like the church was endeavoring to save those who will pay us for saving them. It is right to work and pray for the salvation of the Anglo-Saxon, but we need to remember that it is our duty to save as well the Black man and every other man regardless of creed, color or condition. —Selected.

A WHITE BLACK BIRD

Some years ago we were conducting evangelistic services in an eastern city. At the close of one of the services in which we had emphasized the power of God to save us, and to keep us from sin, we had used the comparison, a sinning Christian is like a White Blackbird. An aged brother stopped us at the door and said, "You said there was no such thing as a white black bird, but there is. Down south there is a bird that sings like a blackbird and is the shape of a blackbird, the size of a blackbird and it is white."

Yes there are some people, and they do not all live down south, that look like men, are the shape of men, and the size of men, who profess to be Christians (white) but they are full of sin and there lives are black

THE LADY OF THE CARDS

By FLORA A. MONTY

(©, 1930, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

A look of quickening interest brightened the middle-aged face of Andrew Graves as a long gray envelope slipped from the pile of letters through which he was glancing.

He tore it open eagerly and drew out a card on which was a water-color sketch of a woman's head. The faintest odor of apple blossoms clung to the interesting trifle.

Graves studied it intently. It was the fifth he had received that week. Beginning Monday morning, one had arrived each day in the first pile of mail brought to his desk. When the first one came he had been but slightly concerned. The second made him curious, and the third had aroused a deep desire to learn their source. The face appealed to him, rousing vaguely some dormant and disconnected memories of his youth.

Opening a drawer in his desk, he took out the ones he had received earlier in the week. Spreading the cards in a row, he made them the objects of his most attentive consideration. The same face was sketched on all, but each represented a different expression and pose. No word of any kind accompanied them.

He settled back in his chair and sat in quiet thought for some moments. The perfume rising to him recalled the early days of his boyhood, the happiest of which were spent in the old orchard at springtime, when the trees were laden with the fragrant pink and white blossoms. And always the lady of the cards seemed to be with him, romping with the group of children who were his companions.

His usually disciplined mind revolted from its training many times throughout the day, and the hour of closing found him poring over the mysterious pictures once again.

He finally glanced toward the window and the evidence of coming twilight swept away his dreams and reminded him of things to be done before he could keep a dinner engagement that night. He reluctantly arose, replaced the cards in the envelopes and laid them carefully away in the drawer, then hurriedly left the office.

Throughout the evening he had a sense of disappointment. It was as if he had been very near a pleasant discovery and had been suddenly drawn back.

Before he left his hostess said: "I had hoped to have you meet an artist this evening, Mr. Graves. She is an unusually clever woman. At the last moment she was detained."

Andrew Graves frowned.

"Perhaps I am fortunate, Mrs. Bowers. Really, since my new home is in process of building, I've been pestered at all times of the day and night by artists who want to do the decorations for that American room of mine. I've taken to refusing to see any of them. I'll look up my own," and he turned abruptly away.

As his car was speeding homeward there flashed into his mind an idea, preposterous, perhaps, but insistent. It connected the cards in the gray envelopes with the artist who had failed to appear. He leaned forward, half yielding to an impulse to go back and demand her name from Mrs. Bowers. Then he decided to go on home, secretly ashamed of himself for allowing his head to be turned by a pretty picture.

But the idea remained and kept first place in his thoughts, with the result that Saturday morning found him at his desk a full hour earlier than he had been for years. Impatiently he ran over his letters. No gray envelope was there! He was chagrined. To have gone so far out of his usual routine as to get down at that hour and then be fooled! He looked his mail over again, but with the same result.

The morning was full of trouble for all the force of employees. Nothing suited, and Tommy, the office boy, dropped his jaunty bearing whenever he carried a card to his employer.

The tenth caller had been turned away despite the urgency of his errand. Tommy once more entered the sanctum. Graves looked up angrily.

"Didn't I tell you," he began, but suddenly stopped as his eyes noted the gray envelope the boy carried. "Where did you get that?" he demanded.

"Lady outside, sir, sent it in."

"A lady! Send her in at once."

He opened the envelope the boy handed him. The same face was on the card it enclosed, but somehow the expression was almost triumphant.

As he studied it the caller entered, and he started to his feet. He stared, but justifiably, for there was the lady of the cards, and the scent of apple blossoms was filling the room. She was tall and slender, and wore a gown of silvery gray. There was a touch of pink about it that matched the bloom of her cheeks.

"You have come," he said simply. "I felt that you must."

"Then the advertisement was successful?" A momentary gleam of mirth sparkled in the brown eyes.

"The advertisement? Oh, the gray envelopes—the cards? What do they mean? But be seated, please. I am rude." He was plainly bewildered.

"I am an artist, Mr. Graves. I have attempted to see you before, but you were never at leisure, so I adopted the card method of getting you acquainted with my work. I hoped I might secure an interview that way."

"You are wonderfully clever," he said slowly, in undisguised admiration. "You have gained your purpose. I shall be glad to give you a commission."

The lady in gray said nothing, but her smile took him back to the days of his boyhood.

"I want some landscapes, not in oil, but in your charming water colors. I want them to embody certain things." And in a softened voice he described his old home, the apple orchard and the spring by the roadside. "I do not expect them to be absolutely true to life as it was then. But it was my childhood home. Let your work be a type. Do with them as you like. Somehow I feel sure you can make exactly what I want."

"Thank you, Mr. Graves. I shall not disappoint you." And she was gone before he realized that he did not know her name or place of residence.

The next month was interminably long. There was no word from his artist, nor could he learn one thing about her. Mrs. Bowers, though besieged with inquiries, refused an answer.

At last, one day, another gray envelope came in the mail, and the hands that opened it trembled in their eagerness. Another card was in it, this time of a little girl of fourteen, with big brown eyes and waving hair. With a throb he recognized her as the little playmate of his early days who had always been with him in the orchard.

Just beneath the picture was written, "Call at 11 Grey terrace."

Exactly thirty minutes later Andrew Graves was ringing the bell at 11 Grey terrace. No one was in the room where he was shown to wait, but, hung against one wall were half a dozen daintily executed sketches of his old farm home, clear and true as the hand of mortal could make.

Hungrily he gazed at them, and then turned to find the artist at his side. Without a word he took her in his arms and kissed her. She made no effort to release herself.

"Maris, I know you now! My little girl sweetheart! My sweetheart forever! Will you come to me when the apple blossoms are here again?"

And she said that she would.

Weathercock Long in Use.

Weathercocks seem to date from early times. According to Duncange, the cock was originally devised as an emblem of clerical vigilance. The large tail of the cock was adapted to turn with the wind.

Many churches have for a vane the emblem of the saints to whom they are dedicated. St. Peter's, Cornhill, London, is surmounted with a key, St. Peter having the keys of heaven and hell.

St. Laurence has for a vane a gridiron, and St. Laurence at Norwich has the gridiron with the holy martyr extended upon the bars. A gilt ship in full sail is the vane upon St Mildred's church in the Poultry.

St. Michael's, Queenshithe, has a ship, the hull of which will hold a bushel of grain, referring to the former traffic in corn at the hithe.

Many Holidays in December.

December, taking the world over, is a month of bank and public holidays. No less than 20 of the 31 days of the month are recognized somewhere as occasions for church fetes or cessation of business in celebration of local or national events.

Christmas, of course, is more widely observed as a holiday than any other, but even it is not recognized everywhere. Non-Christian peoples pay no attention to it, and in countries where the Greek Catholic church prevails, the old style Julian calendar is used, so that, while Christmas is observed as a church festival, it comes about two weeks later than in countries that use the Gregorian calendar.

The Ombu Tree.

The ombu tree on the South American pampas, says W. H. Hudson in Far Away and Long Ago, is a very singular tree, indeed, and being the only representative of tree vegetation natural to the soil, on these level plains, and having also many curious superstitions connected with it, it is a romance in itself. It belongs to the rare Phytolacca family, and has an immense girth—forty or fifty feet in some cases; at the same time the wood is so soft and spongy that it can be cut into with a knife, and is utterly unfit for firewood, for when cut it refuses to dry, but simply rots away like a ripe watermelon.

Centenarians.

So far as we know, most centenarians do not live lives in very marked contrast to those around them. Some of them set store by certain simple habits, others drink or smoke or do both, but always in moderation and true temperance; eat cooked or uncooked food as occasion or desire may determine, and at last drop from the tree of life like an apple fully ripe, and mankind notes their fall and goes on like them, each in his own way. Occasionally one of them, like the celebrated Parr, achieves fame for something that he has done besides living to an exceptionally old age. Parr lived in the reign of ten English kings and queens and died untimely at the age of one hundred and fifty-two from a slight change in his habits and environment, leaving as his chief achievement the record of his years, which has not been surpassed in modern times.

Immortal Deborah.

Hah! she beats them all. The Deborah, for she dared to cast back into the teeth of a shrinking "warrior" these immortal words, lofty in irony: "The Lord will deliver Sisera into the hand of a woman!" And cowering Baark flung himself up from the sod and went after her. But it was Deborah who led on and who won one of the great battles in history. It all occurred in 1296 B. C. Deborah was a propheteas in Israel. Israel was again in danger from a heathen king and his mighty captain, Sisera. A loving wife, a supreme propheteas, a mother, this Deborah—and she was the first epic poet of the world. The song of Deborah in the book of Judges in Holy Writ has the breath of the peaks of genius. She knew herself, and she knew her God—and that it was forces of the spirit that won, not merely the roar and clinch of men.—Chicago Journal.

JERRY DECIDES

By LEOLA DREW

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I suppose they sent me here because I was named after you, Uncle Gerald." Jerry dug into his grapefruit aggressively. "I hate Gerald. Didn't they ever call you Jerry?"

"Men do," responded Marbury absently. All of his answers to Jerry had been absent-minded ones for the past two weeks. He had run out of details the second day after Jerry's sudden arrival.

"Miss Millard calls you Jerry, doesn't she?"

Marbury frowned and wiped off a globule of juice from his waistcoat.

"You should eat that in a bathtub, old man. Can't you be careful?"

Jerry pushed back his plate comfortably.

"I'm through," he announced. "What are we going to do today?"

Marbury read his newspaper, pretending not to hear. As an entertainment committee of one for Margaret's one and only he had officiated for two weeks, and the thing was getting on his nerves. There was no special reason why his sister should have sent Jerry on for a month. She knew he lived in an exclusive bachelor apartment with one Jap manservant. Kato had left the first week, after Jerry had brought in a dozen fresh crabs and put them in the ice box.

"No delight in undisciplined youth," he had said smilingly. "Me go reluctantly but soon."

Since then Marbury had been at the mercy of Jerry. He had constituted himself private secretary and houseboy pro tem., when he was not in the basement chumming with the engineer, or on the roof sending off aeroplanes to the joy of Madison avenue. When his uncle returned from the club before dinner he would give a report on the day's calls.

"That tailor wants you to pay the spring bill anyhow. Says you can let the summer one go till fall. I told him you had the measles badly and had left for the country. And Mrs. Jocelyn asked if you could go to her house party at Newport next week, and I told her yes, if there was good fishing. That right? And a fellow named Bobbie Newell wants you to call him up at the club and tell him how about that supper with——"

"But Why Did You Throw Him Down?"

"Cut it," said Marbury briefly. "I'll call him. Did Miss Millard call up?"

"No, but I called her four times," grinned Jerry. "Gee, that's some girl, Uncle Gerald. She said I could call her up any old time I liked when it got slow here for me, and she thinks it's awful for you to leave me up here alone, and she's invited me down to Lakewood as long as I like and she'll come in herself and get me."

"Fine thing to do, cut me out over my own phone with the prettiest girl I know," Marbury said keenly. "Anybody else?"

"Yep. Mrs. Hamilton's back and wants you to come over as soon as you get in. I told her you couldn't because we were going to the theater tonight. What's up?"

Marbury reached the telephone in one stride and called a hotel number, while Jerry stared at him.

"Hello, Mrs. Hamilton, please. What? Then page her."

That had happened two nights ago, and Jerry had dined alone twice in the little private dining room downstairs. He didn't like it. Somehow he resented Mrs. Hamilton. His uncle had been moody and cheerful by fits and starts. He got out a large mounted photograph and stared at it long. So did Jerry after his departure, and he did not like her. She was very lovely, in evening dress, leaning back in a carved ecclesiastical sort of chair, very slender and dreamy-eyed and gracious, but Jerry summed her up in one word: she looked "sort of slumpy," he thought. Mrs. Hamilton's admirers called it languorous grace, but Jerry had no chivalry. Over on the mantel stood another photograph he liked better—a girl standing on an old boat landing in a sweater, short sport skirt and white tam, smiling back at one, her hands deep in her pockets. This was Nan Millard, and Jerry did some hard thinking on her account. Before the coming of Mrs. Hamilton she had been Marbury's principal concern in life.

"Did Miss Millard," Jerry began, and stopped short, fingering the pearl studs on the bed. He had almost thought out loud. "I mean, Uncle Gerald, which are you going to marry?"

Marbury's fingers fumbled over his ties in the drawer. He missed Kato's ministrations.

"I like Nan the best," Jerry added in what he tried to make an offhand manner.

"So do I, old man, come to think of it," Marbury answered between his teeth. "Trouble is, the ladies have the preference. You can't club them and race for the nearest honeymoon cave, you know. Miss Millard is not accepting a man with only ten thousand a year. She lacks the essential feminine quality of sympathy, which is a bit beyond you, isn't it, Jerry?"

"Has the widow got it?" asked Jerry earnestly. Marbury stared at him fixedly.

"How do you know she's a widow?"

"If she's Mrs. Somebody, you couldn't marry her unless she was, could you?"

Marbury was silent. Oddly enough, the boy's words stirred up a dormant sense of honor. He wondered where old Hamilton was, anyhow? Left in some convenient post abroad, probably. There had been a French divorce, he knew, and the rumor that Frances would marry somebody he had been jealous of over there. All at once he looked at the photograph on the mantel, at Nan's clear, wide eyes and sunny smile, at the sweetness and wholesomeness of her girlhood, and he sighed.

"I like her best, too, old man," he said, "only she won't have me."

The next day Jerry called up Miss Millard and invited her to call for him and take him to lunch so they could get acquainted. She was ever so much better than her pictures, he decided at first sight. Brown eyes and reddish brown hair, and little freckles over her nose like gold dust. And he loved to answer her questions about Marbury. She was so delicate and naive about it. Jerry understood perfectly. So he helped her out. First he gave his uncle a character for good temper and kindness and all around splendid fellowship. Then he told how worried he was about him. They were in a well-known restaurant, at a table near the window, and Jerry felt safe.

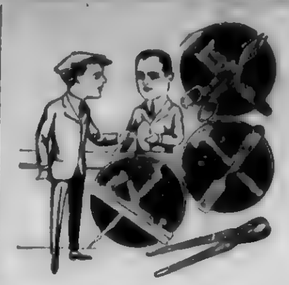
"I can get him here in about two minutes," Jerry said eagerly. "He's just over at the club, and he'd come in one hop if you said so. He's terribly worried about you."

"He seems to be," smiled Nan. "You don't understand, Jerry."

"Sure I do," insisted Jerry. "But he just sees the widow because he needs sympathy. He says you haven't any, and you want somebody with more money. I don't believe a word he says," he added, hastily, at the fire in her eyes. "But why did you throw him down?"

"He never asked me," laughed Nan, scornfully. "Jerry, I think you're fourflushing."

But she spoke to an empty chair. Jerry reached a telephone booth and called the club in triumph.



"Say, that you, Uncle Gerald? This is Jerry. Well, it's O. K. Come on over and see for yourself. At the Regina, Nan and me. Yep. She said so. She said you'd never asked her, so I did for you. What? Oh, all right. I know. We've got a party line out home, too, where everybody hears what you say. Come soon."

He hung up and wiped his face off happily.

"I guess that hangs the widow," he said. "If he doesn't ask me to be best man, he's a quitter."

"ARTIE"

By DORA MOLLAN

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

When Sarah Molthorpe married Arthur Allen she changed the style of "doing" her hair. Grandmother Molthorpe disapproved. "Sarah," she said in her precise, mild way, "your hair was very becoming parted in the middle as you have always worn it. Now that you have changed the parting so far to one side it gives you a very unbalanced appearance. And I have noticed in my long life," she added whimsically, "that exterior looks exert a pronounced influence on one's mental processes." To which Sarah answered one word: "Nonsense."

Two months later Grandma Molthorpe again spoke to her favorite grandchild on the same subject: "Sarah," she said gently, but decidedly, "you are giving too much time to your house and not enough to Arthur. Part your hair in the middle again, child. It will give you a more balanced set of values." Sarah shut her mouth tight on some words she would have spoken had this repeated advice come from anyone but her beloved grannie.

It was directly after supper that night that Arthur proposed to his wife that she accompany him over to the Sykes house next door. "I hate to miss a day day, dear. The poor fellow looks forward so much to my visits. It's no joke to be confined to one room so many months, you know, and I've made so many excuses to Mrs. Sykes on your account," he pleaded; "do come along this time."

"It's not necessary for you to make any at all," Sarah answered. "You know what I think of that woman—what every one around here thinks. She's altogether too free-and-easy in her manner and in her dress. Anyway, [illegible] me to [illegible] I never leave my supper dishes, you know."

That this was a thinly veiled accusation of Mrs. Sykes' housekeeping methods Arthur knew. "Yes, I know you never leave anything you may want to do on my account!" With these words Sarah's husband slammed the kitchen door behind him.

For a moment Sarah felt stunned. It was the first time Arthur had ever spoken crossly to her. Then she thought even harsher things of her next-door neighbor, who had only recently moved into the village. A married woman who wore her hair bobbed and went on the street dressed as Mrs. Sykes did was capable of anything, Sarah decided. Could Grandma Molthorpe's words have carried a hidden meaning? Were they intended as a veiled warning? Was the invalid the only attraction next door? In spite of [illegible] dress, Mrs. Sykes was pretty. [illegible] Sarah's thoughts were interrupted by the sharp ringing of the telphone bell.

It was an out-of-town call. Mr. Allen was wanted. Sarah ran out to the edge of her lawn and called. There was no answer. She went farther—to the foot of the Sykes front steps—and was about to repeat her call from there. But she didn't. And this is why: Through the screen door came the soft contralto voice of Mrs. Sykes: "Oh, Artie, dear, you don't know how heavenly it is just to sit in your lap awhile and feel your comforting arms."

It was enough. Sarah paused to listen no longer. Even ignoring the receiver left off the hook, she ran straight down the street to Grandma Molthorpe. That wise old lady listened silently, stroking the one-sided part in her favorite grandchild's hair meanwhile.

"My dear," Grandma Molthorpe spoke in her usual gentle voice, "you stay right here. I will go and see what all this is about." Sarah didn't remonstrate, just hurled her head a little deeper in the sofa cushion and waited. All her life she had gone to Grandma Molthorpe when in trouble, and she had never failed her yet.

It seemed hours since grandma's cane had tapped down the front walk, but in reality only a short time had elapsed, when Sarah again heard the familiar sound. When the old lady entered the room her expression was noncommittal.

"Now, child," she said, "go upstairs and comb your hair over. Part it straight in the middle. Then I will have something to tell you." Wondering, but knowing well that when her grandmother used that tone she expected to be obeyed, Sarah went.

Grandma looked appraisingly at Sarah when the latter returned. "It's much more becoming that way, child. You must go over and call on the woman tomorrow, Sarah. She's a fascinating little thing, as unconventional as she looks."

"But grandma!" Sarah broke in bewildered. "I heard her say it. I tell you. Where is Arthur?"

"Still up visiting with Mr. Sykes when I left, dear. He doesn't know anything about your coming down here."

"What—" but Sarah got no further. "[illegible] your c[illegible]: it's [illegible] Molthorpe. "Mrs. Sykes has an amusing way of naming her furniture after the persons who gave it to her. They have only a tiny income, and she sold most of their household goods to pay Mr. Sykes' hospital bill. So when her physician advised her to take her husband to the country, their friends gave them enough things to start in on again. Now, tonight, just as you went over, she sat down, after a particularly hard day, in a big easy chair given by an old chum of Mr. Sykes, whom they affectionately call 'Artie.' She was talking to it, not to your Arthur."

Grandma Molthorpe laughed so infectiously that Sarah joined in against her will. "[illegible] run [illegible] home, child, and take a [illegible] old woman's advice. Never judge a person before you know him. Be a chum to your husband—not merely his housekeeper. And part your hair in the middle, child; it's much more becoming."

Before "the [illegible] of the [illegible]ging of birds" is over—and the nightingale is beginning already to "jug-jug" rather than to launch Tennyson's "liquid note"—some musician ought to do fuller justice to the blackbird.

He is the most intelligible of all birds—that is, he has intervals like those of our human music; his phrases may be, and have been put down on our five-lined music paper.

There is a West Sussex blackbird who sang all last May the first five notes of "The Campbells Are Coming," and he is at it again, in the same garden, this year.

Other blackbirds have composed prettier phrases, but all sound equally jolly and sweet in their trolling.

NEWS HAPPENINGS

That Have Taken Place on the Hilltop During the Past Week

A very enjoyable concert was given last Friday evening in the auditorium of the West Broad Street school by pupils of the West Side Elementary School Orchestra, and a few little soloists from other schools of the city.

Various instruments were used for the solo work, violin, flute, clarinet, cornet, cello and the children acquitted themselves well.

Miss Stella De Selm, the new director of orchestras in the public schools, is achieving fine results with the children. This department, as a separate part of the Department of Music in the schools, has been in existence only since January first.

Miss De Selm is very desirous of arousing the attention of the parents to the fact that young children may learn to play musical instruments other than piano and violin.

The program is to be repeated next Friday night in the auditorium of Heyl Avenue school.

A new Hilltop business has been started at 188 Midland avenue. It is an electrical shop, and is run by Messrs. L. Bruckelmier, E. Davis and E. Henderson, Hilltop young men. They will do general electrical construction and repair work and will cater preferably to Hilltop trade.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Edward Pool, 2455 West Broad street, will entertain with a theater party at Keith's Saturday evening for their guests, the Misses Leona and Susie McClain of Parkersburg, W. Va.

Mrs. Effie E. Parker, 38, wife of Mr. Everett L. Parker, employe of the Cullin Realty Co., died of influenza, Monday, Feb. 2, at her home, 169 Clarenden avenue. She leaves her husband, one daughter, one son a year old; also her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. McCullough. The funeral services, which will be private, will be held at 10:00 o'clock Friday morning. Burial in Green Lawn by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

The Intermediate Endeavor Society of the St. Paul United Evangelical church will hold their regular monthly business and social meeting at the parsonage of the church on Friday evening. A program will be given in this meeting carrying out some of the great events in the lives of Washington and Lincoln. Let all the Intermediates be present.

On Thursday evening, Feb. 12th, a valentine party will be given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society, at the home of Mrs. Carl W. Hitsch at 453 Highland Ave. All are invited to come and have a good social time.

Next Wednesday afternoon the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society will meet with Mrs. J. M. Wenrich at 120 Midland avenue. A full attendance is urged.

There will be an entertainment of the Pythian Sisters Wednesday, February 11th in I. O. O. F. hall. Messrs. Haunts, Bodkin and Hunter are the committee.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Arthur Lytle were surprised at their home, 382 South Warren avenue, Thursday evening, Jan 29th, the occasion being their eighth wedding anniversary. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Delmo Young, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Stout, Mrs. R. E. Shadley and son Master Robert and Mrs. Nell Brannon and daughter Margaret Marie of Circleville, O., and Mr. Elmer Reynolds of Columbus, Ohio. They presented Mr. and Mrs. Lytle with a beutiful set of cut glass sherbets in honor of the occasion. After a very pleasant evening they motored to their homes.

Mr. Strode Miller, 72 years of age, died suddenly of heart trouble, on Sunday, February 1st, at his home, 41 South Ogden avenue. He had been apparently well until the moment of his death. He leaves a wife, one son and one daughter. The funeral services were held Tuesday.

Mr. Miller was a retired carpenter contractor, and was a veteran of the Civil War.

Don't work all day Saturday! Buy your cakes, pies and doughnuts at the "good eats" bake sale in Kellar's Wall Paper Store, Saturday, Feb. 7th.

The Straphanger

The Weinland ordinance has small chance of escaping a referendum.

Such an increase in cost of privilege of hanging on a strap will not be at all popular.

The word "moderation" does not seem to be in the "bright lexicon" of our worthy council.

The Strap-hanger still insists that even the eight-for-a-quarter fare was never given a fair trial.

Until something is done to speed up the cars, they will never be a highly popular conveyance.

If the car-fare increase goes through the gas company will come next.

Loud cheers and applause at the Auto Club when the news of passage of Weinland ordinance came in.

The voice of the people will now be heard.

Starving Condition of Children in Parts of Europe

A Way Whereby Every Hilltop Home Can Assist in Their Relief

Five million children under 16 years of age are face to face with starvation in Central Europe. Three millions of these are not merely within the starvation line but are right down at the gates of death. Only food, food immediately, can prevent virtually the total extinction of child-life in the larger cities of the hunger-swept districts.

This is the startling situation presented in cabled reports received by the Red Cross and the American Relief Administration from their representatives abroad.

Conditions which have been terrible throughout the whole of the past year, and which grew rapidly worse with the coming of winter, have reached a climax in horror and suffering wholly beyond the power of description.

The following is from Mr. Herbert Hoover, who is in close touch with the situation.

The situation among some three or four millions of children is particularly acute. Ill-fed and under-nourished during the years of the war, the child populations of Austria, Poland, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and the Baltic states are today face to face with actual starvation.

From money available through the European Children's Fund more than two and a half millions of these children are being given one supplementary meal a day. That is the utmost we can do with the amount now in the fund and at the same time husband our resources so as to continue this child feeding work until a new harvest makes available foodstuffs from within these countries themselves.

We are feeding more than two and a half millions of children the food that means the difference between life and death.

But we are not feeding all the hungry, or all the seriously undernourished even of the child population. We can only care for those absolutely down below the danger line—those in extremis—to whom the denial of our help would certainly mean quick death.

In this situation, every dollar by which the European Children's fund is increased means a saving of child life, for it means that we can extend our relief work just that much further among the hungry, famishing children.

Money expended for relief through the Children's Fund goes exclusively for the purchase and transportation of food to Europe.

Remittance of money direct to Europe, for relief purposes, is the height of folly. In practically all the countries of Central and Eastern Europe, one may have all the money on earth and still be unable to add materially to his supply of food.

Such food as is available is strictly rationed, and even the scant official ration is in many places obtainable only in the store.

Through the system we have set up for child relief, however, the foodstuffs for which are wholly outside the ration control of the governments, it is possible to extend quickly our child-feeding operations. Our limitation is the limitation of money and the necessity to husband that money so far as possible in order to make it cover the months until the next harvest.

The present cost of the supplementary meal we are providing the children is approximately five cents. Every dollar made available means a life-saving meal for some child for three weeks. Five dollars would approximately carry a child through till new foods are available in Europe.

The Austrian and Polish situations are the worst in Europe. The city of Vienna and one or two minor cities like Innsbruck, Gratz, etc., are totally out of food supplies.

There are some 337,000 children in Vienna alone and the Children's Fund is feeding, as best it can, some 290,000 of these.

But in Poland, in Czecho-Slovakia, in Finland, in Hungary, and all the Central European countries, the need for outside food supplies immediately, if the lives of thousands of children are to be saved—is absolute. They are face to face with starvation.

With a sympathetic mind at the awful conditions among the starving children in parts of Europe today, and a desire to have a hand in helping to bring relief there, we thought, "Why cannot the Hilltop, with its great population of Christian and God-fearing people, have a larger part in this work?"

Then there came to our mind this thought: "For two months (at least), from February 1st to April 1st, ALL money paid on subscriptions to the Hilltop Record (to be delivered by carrier) will be used exclusively for this European relief purpose. We will not use one cent of it for any other purpose."

Now, we are going to make an appeal to ALL HILLTOP PEOPLE to help on this fund. We do not wish to call it a Record fund, but a HILLTOP FUND—raised and sent by Hilltop people.

It is said 5 cents a day will keep a child from starving; and that $5.00 will guarantee the life of one till next harvest comes and brings relief.

One 50 cent subscription to the Record will keep one child alive 10 days. Is there any home on the Hilltop that cannot afford to put 50 cents at least in this life-saving cause? We hope not, but on the contrary believe that this community can, and will raise a goodly sum for this purpose.

For each 50 cents sent in, credit for a year's subscription to the Record will be given and a receipt given to that effect. If a person has a subscription already paid somewhat in advance, whatever you pay in additional will be credited to your account in future.

Either send it to the Record office, 2354 W. Broad St., or telephone to us and someone will call on you. Call Hilltop 701 before 4:30 p. m. or Hilltop 1652 after that time. Anyone having suggestions to make as regards this matter will be cordially received.

Mrs. Clara Ditrick, Subscription Manager of the Record, has kindly offered her services in this matter free of charge. Any courtesy given her will be appreciated.

Hilltop 1920 Diary

By TOP. O'HILL

Jan. 30—Winter term of school closes. Scholars take notes of passing grades.

Jan. 31—"Old Sol" getting in his work on the ice, by the dissolving process.

Feb. 1—Revival meeting begin at Glenwood M. E. church.

Feb. 2—Blue Monday—Even the sky above is blue. Mr. G. Hog makes his appearance (so they say) and turns around and makes his disappearance.

Feb. 3—This ought to have been ground hog day—cloudy. Not a sun to be seen.

Feb. 4—Worse and more uv it—slippery walks.

Mrs. Arthur G. Heyl of 83 Belvidere avenue, has been confined at her home with influenza for the past two weeks. Fred Heyl is very ill of the flu at 83 Belvidere Ave.

Are you, reader, interested in the holding of a chautauqua on the Hilltop next summer? If you are be sure and go to the meeting regarding that affair on Tuesday evening, Feb. 10th, at the Hilltop Undertaking Co. office. Do not fail, as it is important.

CHURCH DOINGS

GLENWOOD METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

9:15 a. m. Sunday school, M. H. Prior, superintendent. Classes for all ages. Orchestra music.

Revival meetings are now in progress. Rev. T. M. Anderson of Wilmore, Kentucky, will preach morning and evening.

You will find a cordial welcome at the services of this church. You can not afford to miss the forceful, pungent and forceful sermons of Evangelist Anderson. Hear him once and you will want to hear him every time he preaches. Rev. H. A. James, who conducted the tent meetings last summer, will furnish special music with his cornet. There will also be other special music. There were fine crowds at the services last Sunday. The new song book is here. Come early.

Epworth League at 6 o'clock. Topic "Prevention Better Than Cure." Leader, Harold Miller.

THE HILLTOP EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH

Sunday School at 9:30 a. m.
10:30—Public worship. Pastor's sermon topic, "The Worth and Importance of God's Word."

Come and worship with us.

HILL CREST BAPTIST CHURCH

10:30—Subject, "Stewardship."
6:00 p. m.—Senior B. Y. P. U.
7:00 p. m.—Preaching by pastor. Subject "Can An Intelligent Man Believe in Hell." He will deal with the following questions: Does Death Fix Destiny? Will There Be a Second Chance? Does the Soul Sleep? Will a Loving God Send Anyone to Hell? Where is Hell? What is Hell? You should hear this timely sermon. Baptism will be administered.

Junior at 2:30. Ida Spangler, leader. These meetings are very helpful. Come!

FELLOWSHIP SUPPER.

Wednesday, Feb. 11th, the ladies will serve an oyster supper for members and friends. All members are urged to attend. After the supper a fine program full of great surprises. If you can't walk phone the pastor and we'll send a car after you. We expect every member out.

Intermediate Endeavor at 6:30 P. M., subject for discussion, "A Worth-While Life." (Decision Day.)

Evangelistic service at 7:30 P. M., subject of sermon, "Be Not Deceived, God is Not Mocked."

Regular prayer meeting on Wednesday evening at 7:30 P. M. You will find a cordial welcome at all these services.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST CHURCH

Dr. G. R. Robbins, pastor, will preach Sunday morning on the theme "They Succeeded Because Every One Had a Mind To Work."

Sunday night. Theme not yet selected. Four splendid men were elected to the office of deacons Wednesday night. Why in violation of law are the theaters and picture shows open every Sunday allowed? Because there is not a minister or a church member possessed with sufficient nerve to arrest one proprietor. That would stop it. Don't you know every person attending a picture show or a theater on Sunday is a violator of the law and is thereby teaching and encouraging anarchy. Is it any wonder we are threatened with bloody revolution when Christians and church members are so spineless and good for nothing.

G. R. ROBBINS.

HOGE MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

10:30 A. M.—Morning worship; celebration of the Lord's Supper and Reception of new members. Sermon "I Shall Draw All Men Unto Me." Children's sermon, "Where Love Is There God Is Also."

4:00 P. M.—Vesper service. Sermon theme, "Obliged To Speak." Special duet, soprano and tenor. We welcome you.

St. John Lutheran

Services at 10:30 and 7:00 o'clock. Morning topic, "Why Do Many Hear God's Word in Vain."

Evening topic, "The Tares and the Wheat."

The Ladies' Aid Society of St. John's meets with Mrs. Chas. Foote, 21 N. Burgess Ave., Wednesday afternoon of next week.

HILLTOP CHURCH OF CHRIST

Morning sermon, "Pions at the Wrong Places."

Evening sermon, "History of the Disciples of Christ."

The Woman's Society of Hill Crest held their last meeting at Mrs. Bert Morgan's, 26 N. Harris Ave. The annual election of officers was held. The election was as follows: Mrs. Spring, president; Mrs. Hensel, vice president; Mrs. Cowley, secretary; Mrs. Knox, treasurer; Visiting and Flower Committee, Mrs. Rogers chairman, Mrs. Peake, Mrs. Harding, Mrs. Clark and Mrs. Smoot; Social Membership, Mrs. Miller chairman, Mrs. Knox, Mrs. Sampson and Mrs. Morgan. Program and Literature, Mrs. Ballard and Mrs. Cowley. The ladies of this society are doing a great work for missions under the efficient leadership of Mrs. Spring. They gave $5 to help in the "Dispatch Poor Fund." They are now sewing carpet rags to make rugs to be sent to the Pueblo Hospital in Mexico. Next meeting at Mrs. Cowley's, 47 W. Park Ave.

Home-made doughnuts, pies, cakes, etc., at Kellar's Wall Paper Store, Saturday, Feb. 7, made by Cheerful Workers, Hilltop Church of Christ.

The ladies of Glenwood Aid Society, 2nd Division, will hold an all-day meeting at the home of Mrs. Gates on February 10th. Take the traction car at Broad and Hague at 10:20 and get off at Stop 8.

The King's Heralds will meet Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Gould, 114 Whitethorne avenue. Every member be present. New members welcome.

Mrs. L. S. Amrine, 121 Highland avenue, is visiting her daughter at Athens, Ohio.

Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Turley of Oxford, visited her mother, Mrs. Gregg, 78 Highland avenue, the past week.

Mr. John Mays died on January 21st in Fostoria, N. D.

NOBODY WANTS A BABY

By OLIVE R. BARTON

(©, 1930, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

When Philip McChesney parked his car as usual in front of the building in which he had his bachelor apartment, and stepped from the marble-lined corridor into the passenger elevator, he had no reason to believe that the long lane of his life had come to the proverbial turn.

He was getting very tired of the lane. As he slipped his key into his door it occurred to him he was doing pretty much the same thing he had been doing every afternoon for many years and was likely to do for many more.

My, how tired he was of the routine! How sick he was of everything! How different it would have been if Madeleine had consented to marry him! He was devoted to Madeleine—pretty, willful and altogether selfish Madeleine.

But what was the use of even thinking? She never would have him. She had told him so a hundred times.

"You see, Phil, we are too much alike to be running mates," she said. "We both want a good time, but we want it in our own way; neither of us would be willing to give in to the other. If you wanted to go to a movie, I'd want opera. If I chose Mrs. E.'s dinner you'd be sure to want something else. I think I ought to marry some one different from myself. I'm such a useless creature, you know. I never did a good turn for anyone in my life. Neither did you, now, did you? All you've ever done was to make money. I'd like to think of my husband as somebody unusual. It's so ordinary to be just rich."

Philip's thoughts were getting too unpleasant for further retrospection. But he knew Madeleine was right. He was only good to make money, and everyone was doing that now.

Every bank, firm of brokers and bond company listed in the evening paper was gorging in riches. The stores and shops were prospering, too, every one of them, clearing an enormous profit. Wasn't there anything in the world but money?

Ah! Yes! There was pleasure. Money and pleasure; that was all. And on the front page of the paper the different kinds of trouble resulting from the mad pursuit of both.

Suddenly he saw this unusual notice:

IMPERIAL THEATER.
Fairbanks in "The Sportsman," First Class Vaudeville.
SPECIAL.

"To the holder of the lucky ticket a real, live baby will be given away. Eleven months old. Good parents.

"Don't miss the chance!"

"Ridiculous," thought Philip. A live baby! They wouldn't dare do such a thing. But suppose they did! Who in New York would want a real, live baby? A dog or a monkey might have a chance—but a baby! The red slowly mounted his temples. He was fond of children, unusually so of babies, and he found himself getting curiously excited over the thing.

They'd no business of raffling off a baby even if it could be done legally. But the worst of it was no one would want it!

The lane of Philip's life was approaching a sharp curve at last, had he known it.

That evening found him sitting uneasily through ten reels of film and listening to half a dozen vaudeville sketches in the very show house that advertised the baby—he couldn't stay away—his indignation and curiosity had grown by degrees until now he was waiting for the lucky number to be read.

The house was packed to its limit—the S. R. O. sign had long been out—yet a deathlike stillness hung over the place as the numbers were read. The tenth number out of the box was to get Baby Marie.

At last, "2755," called the man drawing the numbers. "Who has 2755? Will the person holding 2755 please step this way?"

Philip looked around curiously. But there was no response. No one seemed to have the number. Every one looked at his neighbor, necks were craned all over the house. But no one stirred.

"I thought so," said everybody. "Nobody wants a baby!"

"I thought so," said Philip with the rest. "No one wants a baby."

His indignation began right here to boil. It impelled him at last to get up and start down the aisle. He gained the stage by enormous strides.

"If no one wants the baby, I'll take it," he said. "It's an outrage, the whole affair. But if the baby is an orphan and has no home I'll see that it gets one. I—I'll take it home and raise it myself."

There was tremendous applause then. Although it seemed no one wanted the baby, the crowd was glad enough for some one else to play angel.

The manager smiled down into Philip's earnest, indignant eyes.

"Very good, young man. If you really mean what you say, suppose you call at the St. Stephen Children's Home tomorrow, here's the address, and Baby Marie will be handed over to you if the board of trustees are satisfied you are a responsible person. They tried to find homes for a dozen little tots this week but weren't having very good luck."

"Then it isn't just a raffle?" asked Philip, relieved.

"Not exactly! Don't want to hedge, do you?"

"Certainly not! I'll get the child tomorrow. And Philip turned and walked out.

A light hand fell on his arm, and he turned.

"Madeleine! What are you doing here? Are you alone?"

"Yes. Oh, Philip, I saw the notice about the baby and I just had to come, too, it sounded so awful! And I want to tell you how perfectly splendid you were. Do you really mean it? Are you going to get that baby?"

"Certainly. I said I would."

"And take it home?"

"Yes."

"And bring it up?"

"By the grace of God, yes. It would be one thing I might be useful for, besides making money," a little bitterly.

"But you'll have to have a nurse."

"Two, perhaps."

"And it will be very expensive, and—and inconvenient," she reminded him."

"Well?"

"Oh, Philip, let me take the baby. I was just going up anyway when I saw you. And I'm a woman."

"You take it!"

"Yes. Why not?"

"You said you were selfish and useless."

"You said you were, too!"

"And you wouldn't marry me for that reason. The reason doesn't seem to exist now," eagerly.

She had no reply to this. She looked away quickly, but her eyes were very soft.

"You haven't that excuse now, dear. I wonder if—" A new thought had struck him. "Why can't we give the baby a home together, dear? What do you say?"

"All right," she half whispered. But he heard.

CHANGES IN CAPITAL CITY

Some Little Difference Between Washington Today and As It Was a Century or So Ago.

Visitors in Washington, this winter, will appreciate some of the contrasts between the city of today and the capital of the United States of a century or more ago, as described in the recent biography of one of the early justices of the supreme court. In those days, it appears, the White House was surrounded by a rough rail fence, characterized by a contemporary as "not fit for a barnyard," while Pennsylvania avenue was merely a stretch of "yellow tenacious mud," bordered on either side by tree stumps. There were no hotels then. Washington lived in boarding houses. But it was possible to sit at the table with Thomas Jefferson and John Marshall, all for fifteen dollars a week, including service, "wood, candles, and liquors." Now we have the city spacious and beautiful, with our choice of comfortable hosteiries, if not of prices. And lo! It is all "bone dry."—Christian Science.

ECONOMIES IN THE HOME.

It hardly seems necessary to mention that flour sacks of the large size may be bleached and used for various things. Open the seams and hem and you have fine dish towels. The small-sized sugar sacks may be used to hold lettuce after it has been washed and is ready for the table. Put into the sack, it may lay on the ice. Small salt sacks are fine for holding herbs and dried seeds, for use in various ways.

Tea grounds make a fine brightener of carpets. Use them dampened with water, and sweep lightly with a broom.

Old underwear makes fine wash cloths, and stockings of any kind of color, cut in strips and fitted into a mop, will answer, when treated with a good oil, as a dust mop.

When nuts are dry and tasteless, breaking into bits when cracked, soak them for an hour or two in hot water before cracking. They will be like fresh nuts.

When a broom is worn on one side, dip it in hot suds on wash day, and while soft and wet cut with a sharp hatchet or scissors.

Always mix such dry mixtures as cornstarch with sugar when making a sauce, as the sugar keeps it from lumping when the water is added.

Add a dash of salt to most fruits; it saves sugar and brings out the flavor. This is true of fresh or dried fruits.

When making a custard, cook it as usual if it is a boiled custard, and take out a portion, to which may be added various seasonings liked in a salad dressing; the remainder may be sweetened and flavored, and two dishes are ready with one cooking.

Stretching the meat flavor is a great economy. When preparing hamburger, add a cupful of cooked oatmeal, seasonings, and either cook it in a flat cake or small cakes. The cereal will not be noticed, and the dish will be fully as satisfying. Any cereal, such as rice or other cooked breakfast foods, may be used equally as well.

MYSTERIOUS BUNGALOW

By BARBARA KERR

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It sat back from the street, so called, in a lot all tangled over with wire bunch-grass, mesquite and cacti. She counted the different kinds, four varieties crowded around the steps leading up to the front door, as if they wanted to come in out of the arid loneliness.

Though dignified by the name bungalow, it looked more like a farmer's granary, with the windows covered with pieces of old tarpaulin, cleated fast so no one could get a glimpse of the inside.

Some one else, evidently, had been as curious as was Mary Minthorn, for a jagged hole was cut in one torn shade, but try as she might, her eyes could not penetrate the darkness far enough to distinguish the meager outlines of furniture. She had too much regard for the property of others to make the hole bigger, so she would bring her book or a bit of handiwork, and perched upon the top step, amuse herself speculating upon the owner of the mysterious and lonely bungalow.

"A lunger like me, no doubt," she mused piteously, "who has perhaps gone away cured or been gathered to his fathers. I wonder," she said half aloud, "why I always think it is a man's house? It's set on high blocks as if the owner was afraid the rattlesnakes might crawl into it; maybe it's a woman lunger's home? Well, if it is, I wish she'd let me live in it." And she arose and tried to get a peep at the interior.

She had asked many people around the scattered village about the owner, but no one seemed to know, and the nearest neighbors were Mexicans who merely shook their heads with a "No savvy" when interrogated.

The bungalow still held a romantic interest for Miss Mary Minthorn, A. M., but her visits grew less frequent though she would now and then drive by from work, and slowing up, look speculatively at the lonesome shack.

It seemed to have a kinship to her. She had come to Llano Estacado to regain her health and she felt so terribly isolated and lost in her incongruous surroundings. To keep busy and whip up her spirits she created for herself a unique business.

In her runabout, with shovel, a pair of lawn shears—rather old sheep-shears, knife and minor tools, she drove incessantly over the plains gathering botanical specimens for class analysis.

These she sent to schools and colleges where enterprising botany teachers fairly snapped up her boxes of plants labeled with interesting and droll comments. She did not go into scientific nomenclature, for that was the privilege of the student, but she would make sketchy notes that excited curiosity and led toward analysis.

"This is commonly called the Catsclaw or Kittensclaw, but the nearest it comes to a feline is that its next door neighbor was a perky little prairie-dog. And oh, how the honey bees of the valley love it—I mean the catsclaw, not the doggie."

"Now, here are Mr. and Mrs. Cactus and their offspring, you may hunt up the given names of the family."

"I couldn't send you specimens of this Giant Beargrass, but I plucked out some of his beard and send his picture." And the classes were always as eager to find these little notes twisted around stems as they were to classify and tabulate the strange plants.

"This beauteous posey was almost born to blush unseen, for a rattler rather contended with me as to my right, but my watchful bull-dog (automatic) barked at him, and Mr. R. yielded up the ghost and his rattles to science. I send rattles to prove the tale. Don't anybody dare to pun on that, it's not allowed."

As business increased and orders multiplied her notes were merrier and contents of boxes more varied. Mary even sang snatches of old college songs to the unrhythmic bumping of her "Mary-Lin" as she called her car. "After its mother and father," she explained whimsically. Her eyes grew bright, her cheeks a ruddy-brown and her body strong, pliant and steady of nerve. She who had a natural antipathy to firearms learned to handle them with ease and accuracy and she was looking forward with pleasure to the opening of the wild duck season.

Then one Sunday she decided it should be a day of utter indolence, so, taking a book, she departed for the neglected bungalow. Humming to herself, she sat down in the accustomed place and wrote a little note, signed and pushed it under the door.

In the lonely days she had written many notes to the mythical occupant. Some were pathetic in their attempt to be merry and philosophical, some chided the lunger for not being a good sport. "Why, look at me! Here I am a million miles from my kind, and I'm going to see it through. I'm going to be an example for some other poor suffering soul or die in the attempt."

But today she felt so good, so thoroughly fit, that she merely wrote: "Who told you that I was a lunger, anyway? M. M." and slipped it under the door. With a smile she flopped her book open to place and settled down to reading.

Had she noticed that the tarps were removed from the back windows, she would not have been so shocked when the door opened gently behind her. She sprang from her seat, almost toppling from the steps in her fright.

"Oh, I'm sorry! I didn't mean to give you such a fright," said the owner of the bungalow. And looking at the last little note in his hand, then at Mary; "but you are no more a lunger than I am!"

Her mind like a flash ran back over the contents of those foolish notes—"Did you—did you read them all?" she asked weakly.

"Why, of course I did. Didn't you write to me?"

"No, I didn't," flared Mary warmly. I didn't know you were in existence. I wrote them to your house."

"Pardon me." He bowed gravely. "Miss M. M., please enter and be made acquainted properly with my shack. I am Bart Drummond, geologist—"

"Oh, are you?" cried Mary. "I am Mary Minthorn, the old college roommate of your sister Rhoda."

"Now, who put the notion in your head that you were a lunger?" asked Bart later, when they had visited over mutual friends.

"Well, you remember that anti-tuberculosis exhibit we set out? I had charge of one section, and I worked so hard and got so morbid that I imagined I had every symptom ever heard of, so I decided to run away and not contaminate my friends."

"Yes, and sister Rhoda has worried herself sick about you," declared Bart, reprovingly.

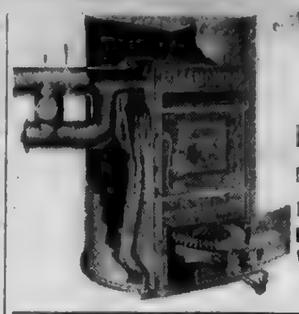
"Oh," murmured Mary contritely, "I was selfish. But I had to work so hard to keep up my courage that I had not time to write."

"Except to vacant bungalows," laughed Bart. Mary blushed. "Wasn't that silly?"

"I don't think so," Bart assured her. "It was quite fortunate. The fact is, I was down here one night for some tools, and the notes identified you. I came back today to find you, and I wrote Rhoda who is coming on soon to visit us."

The way he said "visit us" caused the color to flame up in Mary's cheeks. Rising hastily, she said: "How delightful! But I must be going or I shall miss my dinner, and Sunday dinner is an event at my boarding place."

Bart got his hat, claiming the right to walk along; then, of course, Mary had to ask him to dinner. And somehow, since there were so few conveniences at the bungalow, and Mary's landlady more than willing, she had to invite him to take all his meals at her boarding house.



And it just naturally followed that when Rhoda arrived on the scene the tarps were removed from all the windows and the bungalow furnished setting for a very pretty little wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Drummond will live up in the mountains closer to his work, and though the bungalow is again boarded up, they are more than willing to turn it over to any real or imagined lunger who may come to that part of Llano Estacado to regain health and happiness.

Habit of Overeating.

The habit of overeating, at first a pleasant one, once formed, grows until, like all habits, it is difficult to break. A word to the wise is enough. When you are building or repairing a house you do not pile up material, such as bricks, mortar, timber and slates, and attempt to build them in where they are wanted. The result would be chaos. That is what happens when body-building material is crowded unthinkingly into your "tenement of clay." To begin with, habitual overeating, instead of giving strength, lowers vitality by damping down the flame of life, as a small fire in a grate is smothered by putting on an excess of fuel. It wears out the digestive system, producing dyspepsia and all its manifold train of painful and debilitating symptoms.

RETURN TO THE BEGINNING?

Hard to Foretell Result of Changes Which the Old World Is Facing Today.

That this has been a time to disembarrass ourselves of superfluities and get down to essentials is so obvious that we don't need to have it pointed out to us, yet there is a good deal of preachment on the subject, according to "The Point of View," in Scribner's. It is entertaining to get the different points of view. One woman writer is jubilant over the promise of a new Utopia, a simple world of few or no servants, few clothes (and those made very short in the skirts), moderate food and modest entertainments; in short, a general reduction of the cares of the body. "Oh, destiny," she cries, "help us to recover our lost democratic simplicity!"

Another, more radical, quotes those who say that we must "dip into the primeval," that all our "miserable little civilization" must go, and we must find ourselves back at the beginning of things, hoping, after some eons, to climb up again—presumably—the perfect civilization. According to this melancholy prophet all that the world has painfully learned through the eons of the past is to go to the rubbish heap; not only the civilization of the body, but the civilization of the soul. I don't believe it! Mortify the flesh as we may and must, our souls and minds are not going to the scrap heap. When, indeed, has the spirit of mankind ever mounted higher than in the wreck of so much that has been dear? No, we may be obliged, and doubtless to our souls' good, to bake and brew—did I say brew? The expression is archaic and will soon become obsolete in our bone-dry age—to cook, then, to sweep and dust, to wash and iron and sew, but in relearning these household arts we shall also practice the virtues of thrift, of perseverance and energy and self-sacrifice; and the high virtue of patriotism will become more than ever a part of the texture of our souls. Nor shall the civilization of the intellect perish. Only we shall not have time for the inessential or the unworthy.

But this emergency comes home to many women who are no longer able to perform hard manual labor. Servantless, they flock to the hotels, which become veritable "Old Ladies' Homes." Foregathering in these places of refuge, they think sometimes, but less often than one would imagine, of their household treasures—the old mahogany, the china, the pictures, the family clock, which has passed the time of day with three or four generations, all now packed away in the storage warehouses.

Power Over Snakes Brief.

It is a curious fact that the snake-charmers of India change their victims every year, letting loose the snakes they have had for exactly a year, to the very day, procuring fresh ones to take their places. The superstition in the family is to the effect that their power over individual snakes becomes ineffective after exactly one year.

They cite as proof of the fact that a venturesome female snake-charmer once attempted to keep a particularly fine specimen beyond the specified time.

The result was fatal; the woman died from the creature's bite. This odd belief could be easily explained by the fact that, knowing this legend the woman lost her confidence.—From the Wide World Magazine.

HAMLET AND THE LADY

By MARY MORISON

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

No one would have recognized Iris Ybarra, the most beautiful vampire in moviedom, in the smart little figure that sauntered into Central Park that bright fall afternoon. Clad in a dark blue suit of simple cut, a bunch of fragrant violets pinned at her belt, she looked like sweet sixteen personified—a figure of "Spring" that has lost her way on the yearly calendar, arriving in our autumnal world too late for practical use.

Iris sat down on a bench in the warm sunlight and smiled at the babies in their carriages. Every lady smiled back at Iris. But finally they all went home—and then Iris' attention centered itself on the tragic face of a man seated on an adjoining bench. He had not noticed the babies with their smiles. All the afternoon he had been sitting there, eyeing a coin held listlessly in his hand, and at this moment, with a defiant toss of his head, he was flipping it up in the air. He leaned forward to see how it fell.

"Tails," Iris heard him mutter. "I'll make it two out of three."

He tossed again. Before he could pick up the silver piece Iris was at his elbow, her face all puckered up with friendly concern.

"Oh, don't decide it that way," she cried. The man looked up in amazement, but she rushed on impetuously, her hand on his arm—"Of course, I do not know what your trouble is, but I know you are planning something desperate. Don't decide it by the toss of a coin. It seems too—well—too ungodly, if you will forgive the term."

Iris Shook Her Head.

The man gave a bitter little laugh. "It's all right for you to talk that way, lady. But what do you know about real ungodliness—or real trouble, for that matter? You have probably never been closer to it than disappointment in your new winter hat or the inconvenience of having your motor break down at the wrong time. I guess you have never had to do a thing you didn't want to do in your whole life."

Iris could have told him to the contrary, but she let it pass. "Is it money you need?" she asked.

"Bless your dear little heart, no," answered the man. "I make money enough at the damned thing. But what is it to you, if I may ask? Is it your business in life to go around rescuing poor desperadoes from themselves?"

"Well—er—hardly," said Iris. "But you see, today I'm not working."

"I'm afraid I do not get you," he answered.

"Do you ever go to the movies?" The man nodded. "Well, that's my business in life"—and she smiled at him naively.

"I've probably seen you then," he returned. "You do some sort of a Mary Pickford stunt, I'll wager. You look the part, all right. Congratulations!"

"Don't bother with congratulations," said Iris. "I'm no Mary Pickford. I'm Iris Ybarra, the vampire. Oh, why—" she cried passionately, "why did you remind me of it today, when I was out on a holiday, pretending I had never spent hour upon hour wrecking a home and spoiling one man's life after another? I did so want to be a nice little woman's-place-is-in-the-home-sort of person this afternoon."

"Good lord!" exclaimed the man. "Isn't that funny!" and he went off into peals of laughter.

"Well, I'm glad you think it is such a joke," snapped Iris. "You look almost human when you laugh. When I saw you flipping that coin around you looked like a tragic muse—for all the world like Hamlet, the melancholy Dane, and——"

The man stopped laughing abruptly. "Say that again!" he cried. "Hamlet, if it were only true!"

Iris was too amazed to reply and he went on—"Listen, Miss Vampire, and I'll tell you something I have never told anybody else. All my life it has been my ambition to play Hamlet—it's almost an obsession, I want to so much."

"Who are you?" asked Iris.

"I am Cyril Smith, the leading man of the Gaiety Girls, and I make my living by jokes. Jokes—how I hate them! I was tossing that coin to see whether I should sign a contract for this winter and live through those songs and dances and jokes again.

"You seem to want to solve my problems, so I'll leave it to you instead of the coin. To sign or not to sign, that is the question!"

Iris considered, and then—"Well, I signed my contract for vamping yesterday—and jokes are not a patch on homewrecking."

"All right, lady," said he, "jokes it is."

Iris Ybarra and Cyril Smith looked at each other in the deepening shadows of Central Park. Across the Mall a big hotel loomed up invitingly, its hundreds of windows aglow, shining down on them like hundreds of friendly little stars. A sudden idea flashed into Cyril Smith's mind.

"I say—do you like tea?" he asked.

"I do," answered the vampire, emphatically, "although the public likes to think of me imbibing highballs by the dozen."

Across the tea table, half an hour later, Cyril Smith had another idea. Life was moving fast for the matinee idol.

He kept it to himself for a few minutes, while the orchestra played the soft strains of "La Boheme" and their teacups were exchanged for raspberry-colored ices. Then he burst forth—

"Don't think I'm crazy, lady," said Cyril Smith. "But, are you married?"

Iris shook her head negatively.

"Well—er—have you anything against getting married?" he continued.

"A vampire's place is in the home," she answered demurely.

"My home?" he asked.

This time Iris Ybarra gave her head a decided nod in the right direction.

Grave Our Gift of Anecdote.

Some time ago it was less unusual than it is now for one person to absorb the conversation with pleasure to himself and others. Anecdote is out of fashion here (in England), but apparently it remains popular in America. Very often lately we have heard the conversation of prominent Americans, from the president downward, admired for the color and richness lent to it by witty anecdote and analogy. Perhaps they will revive the fashion in the old country.

Humorous anecdote has a double value. A hearer in one place qualifies himself to become a speaker in another. Also there is no doubt that each man in a company united by laughter laughs more heartily than any man can laugh alone.—From the Spectator (London).

NEWS HAPPENINGS

Mrs. Jasse Pearl Thompson 36, wife of Harry Thompson, 77 S. Oakley Ave., passed away at their home Thursday a. m. from influenza and pneumonia. She leaves her husband who is also ill with the disease, a son, also ill at Toledo, Ohio, and one sister, Mrs. Roy Burt of Zanesville and a number of other relatives and friends. Short funeral services were held at the home in charge of the Hilltop Undertaking Co., after which the remains were taken to her former home, Cambridge by Hilltop Undertaking Co., burial taking place there. She was a kind neighbor and friend to all who knew her and will be greatly missed in her home and neighborhood.

"O, happy, happy soul,
In ecstacies of praise;
Long as eternal ages roll,
Thou seest thy Saviour's face."

"There is a world above,
Where parting is unknown;
A long eternity of love.
Form for the good alone.
And faith beholds the dying here,
Translated to that happier sphere."

Mrs. Jennie Jenkins, age 62 years, widow of the late William W. Jenkins, died of complications on Friday, February 6th, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. T. A. Jones, 71 North Ogden Ave.

She was born in Wales, and came to this country when she was three years old residing in Newark, Ohio during her earlier days, after which she came to Columbus, where she has lived for over 40 years. She was a life long member of the Welch Presbyterian Church. She leaves her daughter and two sons, J. O. Jenkins and D. O. Jenkins. The funeral services were held on Monday the 9th at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn Cemetery by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Mrs. Gladys Postle, 27, wife of Weldon S. Postle, died at her home 41 S. Ogden Ave., Tuesday, February 10 of pneumonia. This is the second death in that home within a few days. Her father Mr. Strode Miller died on February 1st. Mrs. Postle leaves a husband, mother and one brother. The funeral will be held at the residence at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon. Burial in Green Lawn.

Miss Ardis Hensel of 35 N. Warren Ave. was honored by a farewell surprise party by the young people of Hill Crest Baptist Church, Monday night, Feb. 9.

Those present were: Mrs. Harding, Mrs. A. E. Cowley, Mrs. Clarence Miller, Mrs. Ralph Bieber, Mrs. Tracy, Mrs. Langendeffer, Mrs. Hensel, Misses Verna Peake, Ruth Hensel, Evelyn Knox, Messrs. Girden Mugrage, Wm Cady, Myles Robinson, Harding, Clarence Miller, Rev. A. E. Cowley, Eugene Hensel, Roy Hawthorne and Miss Ardis Hensel.

The evening was spent in games and music after which dainty refreshments were served.

All departed at a late hour wishing Miss Hensel a safe journey. Miss Hensel left Tuesday a. m. for Sanford, Florida, where she will visit her uncle Mr. Ballard.

Mr. Herbert Miller of 496 S. Ogden Ave. entertained a few of his friends in honor of his uncle, Private Arthur Miller, who is spending part of his furlough in Columbus. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. U. S. Miller, Misses Margaret and Juanita Brown, Miss Bertha Kellish, Misses Florence and Gladys Miller, Mr. Edward Gleason, Mr. Owen Doody and Mr. Arthur and Herbert Miller. A pleasant evening was enjoyed by all with music and singing. Refreshments were served.

It will be easier to revise the fare upward than downward.

Let's give the six-for-a-quarter fare a trial before we go to the higher rate.

With the coming of Spring new joys will be added to the already overflowing cup of the strap-hangers. Theirs will be the privilege of seeing the grass and the trees burst out in all their verdant freshness.

Won't it be great, when all the snow and ice are gone and the grass grows green and fresh, and the birds are singing in the trees.

Do you want to hear old spiritual truths told in a new, impressive and orcible way? Hear Anderson at Glenwood.

There is a great preponderance of evidence that the people are in a frame of mind to grant a six-for-a-quarter fare at this time. Why was this wholesome attitude of the people ignored by the Council? If the settlement of this very troublesome question is delayed by a referendum the people can not be blamed. The stigma of the blame will be placed upon those of the Council who sought by arbitrary action to substitute their will for what they knew to be the will of the majority. The whole street car controversy has been marked by extremists on both sides, those who sought to "go the limit" in the fare increase. The new Weinland ordinance is evidence that the latter class is now in "the saddle." The happy way out of the "muddle" would have been to adopt the middle course of six-tickets-for a quarter. The West Side is to be congratulated that both their Councilmen held out for such a solution.

The ice in the Scioto is breaking up in such a manner as to be of the least menace to the temporary structures across the river. This is very fortunate for both the contractors and the traveling public.

Twenty-Seven Dollars, is the Amount Received the First Week on the Record's Hilltop Fund for Starving Children in Europe

This will keep, according to calculations, five children from starvation until the harvest time over there, when permanent relief is expected. Why not make it at least from fifty to a hundred.

With a sympathetic mind at the awful conditions among the starving children in parts of Europe today, and a desire to have a hand in helping to bring relief there, we thought, "Why cannot the Hilltop, with its great population of Christian and God-fearing people, have a larger part in this work?"

From February 1st to April 1st, ALL money paid on subscriptions to the Hilltop Record (to be delivered by carrier) will be used exclusively for this European relief purpose.

Now, we are going to make an appeal to ALL HILLTOP PEOPLE to help on this fund. We do not wish to call it a Record fund, but a HILLTOP FUND—raised and sent by Hilltop people.

It is said 5 cents a day will keep a child from starving; and that $5.00 will guarantee the life of one till next harvest comes

One 50 cent subscription to the Record will keep one child alive 10 days. Is there any home on the Hilltop that cannot afford to put 50 cents at least in this life-saving cause?

For each 50 cents sent in, credit for a year's subscription to the Record will be given and a receipt given to that effect. If a person has a subscription already paid somewhat in advance, whatever you pay in additional will be credited to your account in future.

Either send it to the Record office, 2264 W. Broad St., or telephone to us and someone will call on you. Call Hilltop 701 before 4:30 p. m. or Hilltop 1652 after that time. Anyone having suggestions to make as regards this matter will be cordially received.

Mrs. Clara Ditrick, Subscription Manager of the Record, has kindly offered her services in this matter free of charge. Any courtesy given her will be appreciated.

Here is a report of what the Hilltop People have contributed through the Record fund to the relief of the starving children in Europe. We are expecting to send this, together with any other received by the last of this week. Anyone wishing to get in on this first remittance please send it in at once.

$5.00, H. C. Shonting.
$5.00, E. J. Chenoweth
$5.00—J. R. Williamson.

KE-O-KA AIDS THE CIRCULATION

Three lessons within six squares of our home by the use of KE-O-KA have been strengthened so as to use their limbs which before its use was impossible. Ke-O-KA aids the circulation, thus adding to the life forces.

Read what Mrs. V. C. Banner of 175 S. Burgess Ave, says:

"I began the use of KE-O-KA about four months ago. Bronchial pneumonia had rendered me helpless. I could not straighten limbs neither could I stand or walk, but now I can straighten the limbs out and can rest in comfort. I can stand on my feet and walk, which I could not do for about one year before I began the use of KE-O-KA".

We are prepared to deliver quickly at your home or by parcel post six bottles of KE-O-KA, price $5.24. Three bottles, which if used as directed, will last about two months, $2.62.

Address E. M. Leach, 98 N. Harris avenue or call Hilltop 2866. Remember KE-O-KA contains eight of the best vegetable remedies known, has the best medical skill, absolutely harmless, contains no opiates. Order today.

Obituary

Catherine Hammond Postle, aged 68 years, passed out of eathly life January 20, 1920, after a month of illness. Mrs. Postle was born at Utica, New York, December 1st, 1850 and at an early age came with her parents, Mr and Mrs. Patrick Sheehan to central Ohio. She was united in marriage to Wm. Y. Postle in April, 1872. Four children, W. C. and L. L. Postle, Mrs Beatrice Sites and Mrs. Ethel Myers were born to them.

She was the third child in a family of ten, of which two brothers, Wm Sheehan of Alton, O. and Lawrence Sheehan, Springfield, Mo. and three sisters, Mrs. L. Botkin, of Centralia, Mo., Mrs. C. C. McDowell of Cottonwood Falls, Kas., and Mrs. T. S. Postle of this city, who including her children and nine grandchildren live to mourn her departure, and who feel it to be an irreparable loss.

She was a mother in the truest sense of the word, not only to her own children, but to three of her grandchildren, whose mother was deceased eight years ago. She took them to her heart and gave them the love and care that they otherwise would have lost. They with their father feel there are no words to describe the depths of their loss and the poignancy of their grief. The memory of the dear mother life so filled with love and uttermost self-sacrifice will be cherished by her loved ones as their most valued earthly possession. They know and realize that in the fullness of time, as they will pass out, one by one, to the Great Beyond, they will again come within the radiance of her loving presence and be blessed with the greater love which God has transfered to a more beautiful and spiritual body, which will never grow old, but become more beautiful and perfect as the Evans of eternity roll away.

Mrs. Postle was united with the M. E. Church in early life and by precept an dexample has lived a consistent Christian life since. She possessed a happy and optimistic disposition and thereby made a host of friends. She was always ready and willing to sacrifice her own pleasure and comfort to benefit another, and lived a life of practical Christianity, which we should all imitate, though few may equal it.

Dr. W. S. Murray, Dentist, Broad and Terrace, Hilltop 2965.

The Little Lusterware Pitcher

By BARBARA KERR

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It rained, not a gentle, misty, ingratiating rain, but a cold, hard, driving rain. "As if papa told it to," grumbled Renie Martin, whose paramount interest in life just now was the quest of a walnut chair to match a suite that had been her grandmother's. Judge Martin did not sympathize. But nothing would have kept Renie at home after Mr. Berry, the second-hand man, had telegraphed her and told her of a country sale where some solid walnut furniture was to be sold. He said:

"They're richly carved; were in the Hollister family back East for no telling how long and in Sam Hollister's family here for half a century." Mr. Sam Hollister was having the sale.

"It looks as if the quest was over, mother!" cried Renie; "that is, if you can stand the drive, for we'll take a jitney and go out to that sale."

Mrs. Martin had been on a milk diet till her strength was rather of that variety and she knew the trip would lay her up, but she reflected that the next day was Sunday. So what mattered it if she were sick for one day, if her husband did not know the cause of her illness?

They bundled themselves into rubbers and mackintoshes, drank some hot milk, climbed into the jitney and were off.

When they reached the little country place the sale goods had been arranged for the widower by neighbor women, whose hearts were warm and in the right place, but whose dish water had gone stone cold. The dishes washed first showed their patterns somewhat, but all smelled loudly of their bath. However, Renie and her mother did not come to buy dishes, so they picked their way through the jumble in the yard and on the porches and went inside.

There they were! The old walnut chairs with their haircloth upholstering, arranged in company order. The sofa was flanked on one side by the rocker, on the other by the armchair.

The Little Lusterware Pitcher.

six small chairs sitting expectantly and decorously in front. You have it! There were too many of them, too good to be true! They were carved and recarved, but not "our chaste design," groaned Mrs. Martin.

They went out a side door upon a small stoop, where was a table of dishes. Mr. Hollister explained that the five white bowls with the blue landscapes on them, and the bits of straw and paper inside, were new. He had bought them last April, was going to have an oyster supper on his birthday, but as his wife had died before that time, they'd never been used.

"Never even been unpacked," volunteered the hushed and solemn voice of the dishwasher at Mrs. Martin's elbow.

There were two large glass coal oil lamps. One was very beautiful, with a pink bowl, so you did not have to fill it with colored cotton or tissue paper to make it look pretty. There were all varieties of georgeously flowered dishes, representing the various city firms who gave away dishes as premiums with baking powder. Also there was a large glass dish, standing high in the center of the table, supplanted by a stack of glass fruit saucers.

Mrs. Martin and Renie, after the manner of true connoisseurs, noted all this, then they looked at each other. The initiated could not mistake the look. They saw a find!

In the middle of that table was a genuine luster-ware pitcher. Peeping from out the grime was the beautiful pink-lavender house with birds of the same hue, and about the same size, hovering over it!

Mrs. Martin carelessly picked up the pitcher, set it in the tall glass dish and remarked that, as the furniture did not suit her, she would give him a dollar for the two and return to town.

The woman who had washed the dishes heard the extravagant offer and gasped. It affected Hollister. Taking the articles out of Mrs. Martin's hands he resolutely put them back on the table and said:

"No, ma'am! I advertised my goods for sale. Mebbe there might be one of my neighbors come just for that dish. It's meant to hold oranges. If I sold it private, they'd say, 'Hollister never give us no chanst on that dish.' You kin bid it in." And he went to inform his stool bidder.

He was thinking only of the dish. Mrs. Martin and Renie held a little council. Mrs. Martin took the jitney back to town, Renie took up the job of watchful waiting. She noticed among the crowd of bidders and onlookers a young man whose dress and manners were most engaging. She caught his appraising eye several times, but mindful that she was unchaperoned and with only one object in view—to get that luster-ware pitcher—she looked coldly away. However, that did not prevent his gradually edging his way into her vicinity.

Near by, upon a paper-covered trunk, was another stack of dishes; among these was another little brown pitcher. It would hold three times as much as the luster-ware, also it had the advantage of belonging to a class of pitchers the process of making which is not lost, so if anything happens to it, or any of its parts—why the factory is still running. At least that was the argument that sold the mowing machine.

The crier leaned over the dishes to pick up a lot. A country whisper reached the ears of the young man: "Ain't that the little brown pitcher that town woman wanted—better bid on it!" He drew near and made his bid after it was started at 10 cents. Spirited bidding followed. Hollister's neighbors went up spiritedly 5 or 10 cents at a time. The "town guy" pa $1.50 for his pitcher, much to the amusement of Renie, who knew it could be duplicated at the 10-cent store.

Just then some one tossed a roll of cot on batting into the middle of the table of dishes. The crier reached over, picked up the cotton, stuck one finger through the handle of the coveted pitcher, another through the handle of a glass vinegar cruet, and holding them aloft, demanded: "How much am I bid for these?"

To Renie's amazement and in response to her little scared bid they were knocked down to her for fifteen cents.

She slipped the pitcher into the handbag and hurried off in search of a telephone to call the jitney for home. In her haste and state of exultation she ran fairly into the young man who was watching her performance.

She had to stop to beg his pardon, then asked if he knew where she could find a phone that she might call a taxi.

"I am going back to the city myself," he assured her politely, "and as I have plenty of room I will be glad to take you."

Renie demurred. She hardly knew what to say.

Surmising the truth, he smiled and said: "I am sure that our folks know each other if we do not. I am Paul Thurston and am visiting my uncle, Thomas Thurston. And I know now who you are. You are Judge Martin's daughter and I have been wanting to meet you. Besides, I think you are right now dying to laugh at me——"

At which Renie did laugh, a merry little peal of laughter, for Paul was holding up to her gaze his brown pitcher.

"Whatever possessed you to buy that?" gasped Renie. "I thought perhaps you did it for a joke!"

"No, indeed, Miss Martin! I am in deadly earnest. To the uninitiated all brown pitchers look something alike. I thought I had executed my Aunt Thurston's commission in a most workmanlike manner till you bought that bunch of stuff. You see the nurse that attended Mrs. Hollister told my aunt that she had a luster-ware pitcher and I was sent out to buy it at any price—"

Again Renie laughed; then her face grew grave. "Oh, isn't it too bad; Mrs. Thurston will be so disappointed. What should we do?"

Paul picked up a piece of paper and carefully wrapped up his pitcher. "Aunt is a pretty good sport. I'll tell her the truth; then when I get back to Philadelphia I'll find her one. At any rate, I know she hasn't in her collection a pitcher like this. So come on, let's take our pitchers home."

Was it raining? Oh, but that was in the morning. If it still rained two young people whose acquaintance began at a country sale where they were both trying to buy a luster-ware pitcher did not know it, for the journey back was all too short.

And what did Aunt Thurston say?

She just laughed and said: "What difference does it make? That pitcher will be in the Thurston family, anyway, or I'll miss my guess."

Cast-Iron Made From Steel Scrap.

A development of war conditions in the steel industry of the United States has been the demonstration of the possibility of making pig iron and iron castings direct from steel scrap in an electric furnace—something never accomplished before. It has been claimed that such iron, cast in the form of castings, is far superior to the same castings made from ordinary pig iron, melted and cast. Tests of this new iron recently made at Columbia university demonstrate its high quality. Its tensile strength was shown to be 40,730 to 45,030 pounds per square inch, considerably higher than that of ordinary cast iron.—American Machinist.

There Are Others.

Patience—Peggy seems so pleased today.

Patrice—What's unusual?

"Why, Harry kissed her and called her his lump of sugar."

"Perhaps she doesn't know Harry is prodigal with his lumps of sugar."

DEADWOOD

The above title is the name of a western city, we visited some time ago, situated near the largest gold mine in the world, over two thousand men employed digging out the rock bearing the precious metal, from five to seven million dollars taken out every year, Deadwood.

That word is suggestive of death, and the great hills about the town are covered with thousands of tall pines, bare trunks standing as whitened monuments of the destructive forest fires that swept over the hills years ago. Even the soil and the rocks appear to have all the life burned out of them. But the town down in the canyon, composed of 4,000 people, busy, active in the pursuits of pleasure and gain, twenty saloons, open day and night, before prohibition went into effect; a Red light district equal to many of the larger cities; a miniature China town and all the other accessories of satan for the destroying of the souls and bodies of men.

To offset this flood of iniquity and sin, there are four churches, struggling, hardly making a ripple on the surface of this flood of death.

A pastor said recently he was discouraged, the people wil not come to church. Even Carrie Nation could ndt draw a crowd in Deadwood. "Let them alone they are married to their idols." "Lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God." The minister of the Gospel of peace, of glad tidings of great joy, must not interfere with the personal liberty of this army going down to death. Probably every state in the Union has a representative in "White Rocks" cemetery, with a little board at the head of the grave with this lone word "unknown." Scores of other graves are marked in like manner, "Vinegar Bill Boone," "Jack," "Mr. Jones," "Pete Smith," "Cow Boy Ike."

Blind Boy

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(©, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Pale moonlight shimmered down through the barren trees; barren, yet strangely ethereally lovely, they were rearing their silvered branches up through the soft shadows of the garden.

But Avis saw none of it. Slim and white and sullen, she made her way carelessly through the glorified evening woods that skirted her father's estate. She was blind to all the beauty in the world—unseeing, unfeeling, save her own hurt lingered. She wanted to close out all living things from sight and never more sense the caressing touch of beauty.

Life had turned on her viciously and wrenched from her hold the only living thing she wanted, and Avis was suffering over the loss of a man as she thought no one else had ever suffered in the whole of the world.

Her eyes turned languidly toward the little lake where the pink pond lilies used to grow. And in spite of her conviction that life was one grand failure and men poor atoms of wreckage drifting about at the mercy of tides, Avis grudgingly admitted that the moonlight on the lily pond was rarely beautiful.

"But treacherous," she meditated ironically, "like love—beautiful on the surface, but tainted, horribly unsavory in the depth of it!"

Avis heaved a sigh. She was of sufficient years to know, though she refused stubbornly to admit it, that Jeffry Arnold was not the kind of man to harbor so sincere and true a love as Avis had given him. He had fled to another woman, and Avis was left with jagged love thrusts in her sensitive nature, making her feel that life was an impossible state for her.

During their fervid courtship she had known, but blinded herself to his limitations. She had been deaf to the council of minds other than her own and had clung to her love for him through all adverse criticism.

Now Arnold had thrown her over and life was a sorry thing for Avis.

Suddenly from out of the shadows of the barren trees a slim, boyish figure strove painfully with the deep undergrowth to make his way into a clearing. He was feeling his way cautiously, yet with certain familiarity among the silver birch trees. His hand, white and ethereal in the moonlight, fascinated Avis and she watched it moving from tree to tree.

Was Feeling His Way Cautiously.

He was making his way slowly but surely toward the deep pond. The white calm of his finely chiseled face was now clear in the light. There was a world of interest, of exquisite finality there, as if in his human blindness he had found a far greater outlook, an expanse of vision rare to the open eyes. There was no hope in the face—only a quiet surrender to a greater power.

"He must be walking in his sleep," thought Avis and realising that she must stop him before he reached the edge of the pond. The shock of icy water might prove fatal. She rose stealthily and quietly so as not to frighten him, and gently as a lily brushing its mate she slipped her hand around his arm, then turned him from the pond.

Against her arm she felt the man's heart quicken its beat.

"Who is that?" he asked quietly.

"You are walking straight into the water," Avis said, conscious that her voice was strangling with emotions.

This man was blind—blind to all the beauty of this moonlit world! Blind—and little over his first youth! And the laugh that sprang from his lips was boyish, actually boyish.

Avis shrank from her own petty inferiority. Her scanty, meager troubles stung her consciousness into utter shame. She suddenly hated Arnold with a hate that flung a huge carpet over her former love and smothered it for all time. She hated herself, too for the moment of weakness she had allowed his desertion to give her. In vivid flashes these truths flung themselves before her.

But the blind boy was speaking and Avis heard him with startling clarity of brain. It seemed as if her heart had been thrown wide open swiftly—that he might enter.

"I thought I knew every inch of this wonderful place. As a kiddie every tree and every curve of the wee lake was familiar to me. Funny—if I had bumped off here—after going right through the great war."

Half consciously Avis drew the boy's arm nearer her side. They had blinded, him, them, those beasts of the enemy country.

"If they had only blinded me before," he said, as if he had sensed her thought, "only a scant half hour so that I could have remembered my pals as I saw them dashing headlong over the top, full of life, manhood—the bravest and finest pals God ever put breath in." He drew a breath and ceased speaking, but his silence was more terrible to Avis than a vivid word picture, for while his body had tautened she knew that he was racked with inward sobs. He was struggling to forget that flash of wreckage penned within his brain just before sight had been snatched from him.

Stealthily, like prisoners escaping from crushing confinement, the tears squeezed through Avis' eyelids and splashed down over her hands.

"But don't you think I'm a quitter," the man finally was saying. "I am thankful to have known so brave a set of men, honored for having fought beside them. And if the good Lord wills that I am never to see again—well, I certainly have my imagination left. I have had visions, dozens of them scrambling across my brain and crowding to get out. Some day, when I have learned to use a typewriter, I will put them down in story form and perhaps make something worthy of my life—why, my dear," he broke off and spoke softly, "you are crying—why do you weep?"

The gentleness of his voice set Avis to crying afresh.

"Surely you are not sad on my account," he continued, as if speaking to a very small child. "I have seen all the beauty of the world—the sun rippling on this lily pond, the lovely smile on beautiful lips, the love shining in true eyes—all these things I have seen and there is nothing can rob me of memory—they are still as vivid before my brain as if the eyes could rest upon them. I am sorry I mentioned the grim destruction of battle—I need not have pained you." He paused for a moment as if seeking words that should not cause further sadness. "I do not lament the sightlessness of my eyes. Perhaps had I been able to see the beauty of the world I might have forgotten, in my happiness, the pals that died—died that the world might remain—beautiful."

"Oh, God!" Avis shrank from the turmoil of her own shame. "This blind, utterly blind boy is helping me—me, with all my perfect faculties, to find life wonderful. He whose eyes are sightless is teaching me to see; he whose body is frail is upholding me, and his slim, white hands are guiding me into a new light."

He had slipped his arm further within hers now and was walking gently along the edge of the pond. His unconscious abandon of her care, his footsteps ready to follow where she would lead had a marvelous effect on Avis. That piercing grief over self melted out of her brain and left a wonderful desire to live and live worthily. The gentleness of the blind stranger and his quiet submission to tragedy or perhaps his complete surrender to a power beyond the physical swept Avis into a state that bordered very nearly the domain of a great love.

She knew that a mysterious light was even then casting its first pale rays across their path, that out under the moon and the barren trees and the weird loveliness of the lily pond she and the blind boy had found a world of happiness undreamed until then by either of them.

"The warm tear drops are not falling on my hand now," he was saying softly. "I suppose those tiny stars in the big, blue dome above us have twinkled all the sadness from your heart."

And Avis answered as if they had known one another many years, her voice betraying an emotion quite foreign, so gentle and true it was.

"No, not the stars, blind boy—but you, just you."

He quivered and remained very still, as if over his entire life a great wave of warmth were spreading.

And lest the moment be fraught with too much emotion, Avis laughed softly. "I am going to get a typewriter tomorrow and begin taking down your stories as soon as my fingers will obey your voice."

"I thought war was a tremendous experience, but it must have been only a stepping stone to this greater one," was what the blind boy said.

Snap Judgment

By S. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

When John Leonard took the place of the old cashier at the bank the girls frankly criticised him, after the manner of their kind. They decided he was too "quiet" to be any fun, and Cynthia Merrill, who knew through a friend of her cousin's aunt that he came from Burtonville, put it down to the fact that he was from the country.

When they quizzed him he told them that there were as many as 300 people in his home town—when they were all at home that is. He, for instance, now made the census one less. All of which the girls took with a grain of salt. However, he was grave, he was taciturn and he was "no dresser."

Cynthia Merrill was his feminine opposite. Chicness and daintiness summed up her clothes, summer and winter. Leonard feasted his eyes on her daily through the grill of his inclosure as she sat at the typ writer in the adjacent room. He was by no means sure she would be, at all desirable. "These independent business girls," he said to himself as he sat late one night, chasing an elusive dime which kept his books from balancing, "are all right for a man whose income is steadily increasing. They take it as a matter of course that the whole of a man's salary is theirs to spend upon their backs, but for me who will never amass a fortune—nothing doing."

As for Cynthia, she would have been amazed at any one so insignificant as John Leonard daring to think of her in terms of a future partner, much less refusing her! Cynthia had plan in her pretty head—several of them. For one thing, some day she wante to travel. She didn't care how, sh laughingly told the girls, "not if I have to ride the bumpers!"

As summer days approached the buzz of conversation busied itself with the annual outing "down the river," at which the directors of the bank and the members of the office force mingled on terms of easy sociability.

There would be a baseball game, the men against the girls, a three-legged race and other sports. The clambake at noon would be supplemented by a picnic lunch at supper, for which the girls provided the "eats."

On the appointed day seven automobiles carried the merry crowd to its destination. Cynthia, trimly shod and alluring in a sport skirt of soft silk, her dainty blouse open at the neck (for a good "burn"), wearing what appeared to Leonard's masculine eyes as an imported Paris outing hat, was easily the most popular of the girls. Leonard, sitting on the beach, his knees hunched under his chin, watched her exchanging airy persiflage with young Greaves, the president's son.

After the huge clambake there were naps on the sand and strolls over the rocks. Then came a swim in the water and it was time to draw partners for supper. The custom of the outings had always been to draw lots the men partaking of the company and basket lunch of the girls they won.

And Cynthia fell to Leonard! Unseen by him she made a little face for the benefit of the other girls. Yet she really wasn't quite as sorry as she pretended. In some way this silent man interested her.

Sitting apart, their backs against a great bowlder on the sand, Cynthia opened her basket. Wrapped in folds of spotless napkins was a lunch such as to gladden the heart of any man, delicious sandwiches, a little jar of pickles, sections of flaky pie, and a rich melt-in-your mouth chocolate cake.

Not much conversation at first passed between them. Cynthia was busy observing slyly that Leonard's eyes were really fine, widely set and sincere. If only he were more—well, sophisticated!

"This is wonderful cake, Miss Merrill!" he complimented, wondering a he did so where such stuff could be bought nowadays or if she had a mother who baked it for her.

"I'm glad you like it," murmured Cynthia. "Here—have another piece!"

"If I could have had a piece of this cake when I was held up without food once in Alaska——"

He didn't have a chance to finish. "Alaska!" exclaimed Cynthia. "Have you been in Alaska?"

"Why, yes," said Leonard, and added carelessly, "I ran up there on my way back from Hawaii."

Cynthia looked at him in amazement. This country fellow from Burtonville! "I guess you have traveled," she said.

"Well, I guess I have, some," he returned modestly. "I had an uncle who was captain of a New Bedford whaler. He took me with him a number of times and I sort of got the fever."

"You've never been around the Horn!" asked Cynthia hopefully.

"All of three times," he laughed.

Around the Horn three times! Nothing could impress the girl more. That was enough. Unconsciously she sighed.

"You don't mean to say a girl like you is interested in that sort of thing!" he said in surprise.

"Well, rather," she said emphatically. Then, shifting the subject from herself to him: "But tell me, what are you doing cooped up in a little cage at the bank?"

"Well, I got word that my only relative, an aunt, had died in Burtonville, where I was born and there was some little difficulty in settling up the estate. I was the only heir, and when it is finally fixed up, I shall have—well, enough to let me wander about the world a bit more before I die. Until then—well, I had to do something or starve. Therefore, my cage, as you call it," and he smiled.

Cynthia looked very soft and young sitting with her feet folded up under her, her eyes fixed on him dreamily.

"Do you know," said he impulsively, "I don't know that I shall ever marry, but when I find a girl who likes the place I've picked out for a honeymoon, a little clearing on the Peace river in Canada, where the stillness of the wilderness is only broken by the sound of the rapids above—well, maybe I will then. I suppose that most girls would much rather go where they could show off their trousseaus," he added lightly.

"She'll be a lucky girl," said Cynthia briskly. "But come, Mr. Leonard have this last piece of cake. It is the favorite cake I make."

"Did you make that cake?" he asked.

"Why certainly," she cried. "I made the cake—and the sandwiches and the pickels and the pie and, yes, I made my clothes and hat."

"Well, I'll be jiggered!" Leonard ejaculated, "and I humbly beg your pardon."

"And I yours," laughed Cynthia, but neither asked the other for what.

A year later Leonard sat in the shadow of a little tent. Breaking the stillness of early dusk came the distant roar of rapids. From the fire nearby rose the enticing smell of bacon crisply fried, of cornbread delicately browned and of aromatic coffee. "Girl," he said, apparently apropos of nothing, to his tanned companion in flannel blouse and corduroy knickers untangling a fish line beside him, "snap judgments aren't worth much."

"Emphatically not!" said Cynthia.

SWALLOWED UP BY THE CITY

"Little Britain," Once Known as Heart's Core of London, Has Undergone Great Change.

"In the center of the great city of London lies a small neighborhood, consisting of a cluster of narrow streets and courts, of very venerable and debilitated houses, which goes by the name of Little Britain. Christ church school and St. Bartholomew's hospital bound it on the west, Smithfield and Long lane on the north, Aldersgate street, like an arm of the sea, divides it from the eastern part of the city," says Washington Irving in his "Sketch Book." "Little Britain may be truly called the heart's core of the city," observes a writer in the London Times.

Long ago the district began to change. The Misses Lamb, whose early objections to the lack of fashion in Little Britain are described by Irving, used to invite "genteel company" from Theobold's road, Red Lion square, Gray's Inn lane and Hatton garden. Christ church school has gone, and so have the "debilitated houses." They have given place to offices and showrooms, such as that which are now for sale, "producing £570 gross per annum, held for thirty-five years at £210." A single building now brings in as much as a whole street formerly yielded, and Little Britain, hemmed in by the extension of the post office, enjoys the reputation of being a very valuable area for commercial purposes. Irving's description of Little Britain clearly includes references to Cloth Fair. Little Britain, according to Stow, was so called because the earls of Brittany formerly lived there. It was at one time the chief city market for second-hand books.

IN THE CITY PRISON.

The following are some of the inscriptions on the cell doors in the City Prison, scratched in the old paint or daubed on with the oil from the hinges on the cell doors, "Sloans Office," "Entrance Hotel DeGink," You Are Safe In Here," Keep Out This Is My office," "This Is Hell," Private," "Office Hours 12 To 12," Etc.

Obvious Occupation.

"Have you been following up clews?" inquired the man who reads detective stories.

"Clews!" rejoined the regular detective. "A live man has all he can do to take notice of what's going on under his nose, without workin' with a microscope."

NEWS HAPPENINGS

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Garnett very delightfully entertained at their home, 272 South Harris avenue, on Saturday evening in honor of St. Valentine. All the guests participated in many games, after which dainty refreshments were served. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Garnett, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Price, the Misses Ruth and Dorothy Garnett, Ruth Ellison, Annabell Poulson, Dorothy Postle, Roma Day, Cornelia Jones, Mabel and Florence Dum, Messrs. Donald Garnett, Oscie Steele, James and Daniel Russell, Donald Weymer, Cecil Dixon, Kenneth Smoke, Ralph Dunn, Mr. Crawford and Orville de Priest.

Kenneth Andrew Ferguson, 4, colored, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ferguson, died of pneumonia Friday, February 13, at the home of his parents, 457 South Oakley avenue. Funeral was held Monday at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn Cemetery.

Mrs. Margaret S. Addison, 37, wife of Adam Addison, died of pneumonia Friday, February 13, at her home, 84 South Eureka avenue. She leaves her husband, two sons, her mother, a sister and two brothers. Funeral was held Monday at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn Cemetery. She was sick but three days. She attended the funeral of her brother in Toledo just the Saturday before. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Mrs. Hattie W. Davis, 60, wife of Jessie P. Davis, died of complications on Monday night at her home, 147 North Burgess avenue. She leaves her husband, one son, Willard Davis of Gallipolis, and two grandchildren. She was a member of Delta Review, Ladies of the Maccabees, and the Glenwood M. E. Church. Burial in Union Cemetery.

He had been working for the Paige Automobile Co The funeral was held February 13th, at the residence of Mrs. Guy Ault, 146 Richardson avenue. Burial in Wesley Chapel Cemetery by the Hilltop dertaking Company.

Everything has gone up except lots in the Broad Willson addition at Camp Chase. The best garden land in Franklin county. Eight lots 48x188 feet on Broad street at $400.00 each. They will be more after March 1st. Call T. A. Jones at the West Side Lumber Co., for further information, Hilltop 177 or 779 evenings. Addition only few hundred feet from end of car line.

Dr. W. S. Murray returned Monday from a week-end visit with his family at Athens, Ohio.

A very enjoyable evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Smith, 69 South Terrace street, Saturday, February 14th, the occasion being their son, Richard's fifteenth birthday. He was the recipient of many beautiful gifts. The home was decorated in hearts and cupids. Red carnations formed a background for a large birthday cake. The guests were entertained with music and Valentine games. Those present were Marjorie Slater, Dorothy Prior, Helen Oliver, Dorothy Fuller, Lelia and Martha Greer, Mariam McCombs, Walter Kidd, Raiston Westlake, Kerber Schleup, Charles Dolby, Robert Niles, Pearl Nagle, Clarence Ison, Richard Smith. At a late hour refreshments were served, and all departed wishing Richard many more happy birthdays.

Two valentine parties were given last week at Glenwood Shelter House. On Thursday the Elementary Girls exchanged valentines and played games and Miss Grace McCune put on several aesthetic dances.

Following is the weekly schedule at Glenwood Shelter House: 9 to 11 a. m.—Play School (ages 4 to 6 years). 7 to 8 and 8 to 9, Monday—Women's Gym Classes. 6 to 9 Wednesday—Girls' basket ball and church league games. 3:30 to 4:30, Tuesday—Elementary and Gym Classes. 3:30 to 4:30, Thursday—Aesthetic Dancing

Mrs. R. E. Spring and little son, Elwood, 109 South Eureka avenue, have been shut in on account of flu for the past two weeks, but are now slowly improving.

Mrs. C. W. Dowler and daughter, Ruth, who spent last week in Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Ky., returned home Friday.

Mrs. D. B. Lashley and daughter, Beulah, 20 Belvidere avenue, are both able to be out after being confined to their home with flu.

NOTICE—On account of the influenza epidemic the evening meeting of the Highland Avenue Parent-Teachers' Association has been postponed. Miss Atkinson of the Children's Hospital, will give an address at the next regular meeting, Thursday, February 26, at 2:30 p. m., at the school. We cordially invite you to come. Mrs. Sharp, President.

The city firemen are asking council for an increase in pay. While the cost of living has increased 126 per cent since the beginning of the war, the firemen's pay has been increased but 25 per cent and that in 1918. We are hoping our Hilltop councilmen will do all they can to help them in their efforts.

A meeting was held Tuesday evening, February 10th, when it was decided to have a chautauqua on the Hilltop in August. A meeting will be held in about 60 days, and at that time will organize. Every person that signed the contract will be expected to be there.

The Straphanger

Strap hanging only becomes a privilege to be sought when you can exchange your seat for it, in favor of a trailer fellow passenger.

There should be two more rows of straps on the West Broad cars. When we pay for straps, let us have straps.

By the action of the city council, one would imagine that they expected the wives of the present, protesting city employees to become the breadwinners and do it at the present low salaries.

Why would it not be better, if revenue is lacking, to combine and consolidate some of the positions, thus reducing the force and thereby make it possible to increase the salaries of those remaining without necessity of incurring more expense?

Why "wish" an unprofitable job upon a woman just merely because she is a woman? Is that chivalry?

The human heart is the battleground between good and evil. Who will be enthroned in your heart, Christ or Satan? Hear Anderson at Glenwood.

Let us perform each day one particular task and work in such a way as to make it a loving service. There is no task so humble or menial but what can be ennobled by putting our "whole soul" into it, and thus transforming it from mere drudgery into "an important link" of duty in the complex chain of our every-day life.

How strenuous are your family and social demands? You will hear something far more important than these, namely, your soul's demands, if you hear Anderson at Glenwood.

February is fast slipping away—soon the spring and the birds and the flowers.

Henry Ford has something new in the way of a street car.—Why a long-time contract with C., R. P. and L.?

Some people hold two straps. Don't be stingy! There isn't enough to go 'round at best.—Strap Hanger.

STRAP HANGER

Miss Donna Mayer of 181 North Harris avenue, has been confined to her home a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. James A. Hill, of North Harris avenue, had as their guests Mr. Hill's sister and niece, Mrs. Charles Schneider of Toledo, and daughter, Mrs. Frank Nicklaus and little son, Charles.

$46.50 is the Amount Received on the Record's Hilltop Fund for Starving Children in Europe

In the Meantime Thousands are Dying Because Sufficient Relief is Not Reaching Them.

Reader, What Have YOU Done?

From February 1st to April 1st, ALL money paid on subscriptions to the Hilltop Record (to be delivered by carrier) will be used exclusively for this European relief purpose.

One 50 cent subscription to the Record will keep one child alive 10 days. Is there any home on the Hilltop that cannot afford to put 50 cents at least in this life-saving cause?

It is said 5 cents a day will keep a child from starving; and that $5.00 will guarantee the life of one till next harvest comes

For each 50 cents sent in, credit for a year's subscription to the Record will be given and a receipt given to that effect. If a person has a subscription already paid somewhat in advance, whatever you pay in additional will be credited to your account in future.

Either send it to the Record office, 2254 W. Broad St., or telephone to us and someone will call on you. Call Hilltop 701 before 4:30 p. m. or Hilltop 1652 after that time. Anyone having suggestions to make as regards this matter will be cordially received.

The Hilltop fund for starving children in Europe is growing, but not as fast as it should. Since last week's Record was published, money to the amount of $19.50 has been received toward this fund. As it stands at this writing it is as follows:

|---|---|
| Previously reported | $27.00 |
| Received during week from— | |
| Hilltop Boy Scouts | 5.00 |
| Mrs. David Binns | 2.00 |
| Scott Clark | 1.00 |
| B. H. Oyler | 1.00 |
| Mr and Mrs. Albert Jordan | 2.00 |
| Mrs. Edward Tatzer | .50 |
| Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Goss | 1.00 |
| H. S. Harrison | 1.00 |
| Mrs. Ina Dodson | .50 |
| Mrs. Anna Mott | 1.00 |
| Mrs. Tilly Baker | 1.00 |
| Mrs. H. W. Kirker | 1.00 |
| J. H. Mallin | .25 |
| N. C. Ault | .50 |
| Mrs. O. C. Daniel | .50 |
| Mrs. L. W. Muncie | .25 |
| Total to date | $46.50 |

On last Saturday $41.00 of this amount was forwarded to the American Relief Administration, 115 Broadway, New York. According to reported arrangements the amount should be over there and doing its good work in helping to save those starving ones before this paper is in the hands of our readers. As is said, $5.00 will keep one child from starving till the harvest comes, therefore the amount already raised by Hilltop people is sufficient to keep nine children alive. And we honestly believe that each and every Hilltop person who has contributed to this worthy cause is feeling a greater blessing because of having given it than if they had not done so and had three or four times the amount in their posession. Just try this, dear reader, if you have not yet contributed, and see if you are not repaid many times over by thus doing so. (Matt. 25:34, etc.)

THE GOOSE

By WILL T. AMES

(©, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Because I am a man I have to pull very hard at the strings that operate my face muscles in order to muster a feeble grin over that joke—the one about the way to a man's heart being through his stomach. Ten million times have persons trotted out that hackneyed old saw, spit on it, given it a rub with their sleeve and handed it out as a bright and shining specimen of wit.

They don't stop to think that they're sweepingly reducing the whole male sex to the level of Jones' pig, which adores Mrs. Jones not at all because she is adorable in herself, but because she is stuffing it for its November tragedy and subsequent usefulness.

Yet it is not to be denied that many a romance has germinated in a meal; that a hungry man's heart has been mellowed and made fertile of love by a beefsteak many a time. The point I make, however, is that it is a finer, more psychic thing than mere stomachic emptiness and piggy greed that underlies this association of food and affection in the soul of mere man.

Ask the Salvation Army lassies who fried doughnuts for the boys "over there," whether it was the doughnuts themselves or the homey intimacy of their flavor that brought joy to the soldiers' nostalgic hearts and a film of tears to their dauntless eyes.

Jackie Follet sat on a tall stool at the lunch counter in the Cornwall station, eating bacon and eggs and custard pie. You might make a guess that Jackie was a good-looking boy—you could do no more than guess; for he was black with the dust and soot of the locomotive tender, and to have cleansed his fireman's grime would have taken more time than Jackie had for his meal.

"Tillie, How Did You Do It?"

But there was a jaunty rakishness to the cock of his long-peaked railroader's cap and a laughing light in his big frank eyes that went far in support of the guess. The eyes just now were dancing with bantering Tillie Birch, for Tillie was a never-ending joy to the fireman, and his noonday stop at Cornwall one of the salient features of his strenuous existence.

"What you going to swear off tomorrow, Tillie—chaw-gum or holding hands with fat drummers over the counter?"

"Neither one. I'm going to quit mopping up after dirty engine crews and save the coal dust; fuel's going up."

"Huh! If I was to come in here washed up you'd get stuck on me, and then that google-eyed butcher friend of yours would go get a club and spoil a perfectly good fireman."

"My goodness, but don't you hate yourself! And I wish you'd quit jollying me about that butcher. He ain't any friend of mine. I don't even know his name."

"You don't? In a little burg like this? Say, Tillie," Jackie's face lost its bantering grin under the soot, "I live in one of these hick towns when I'm home, and there ain't a soul in it I don't know, even down to the dogs and cats. Friendly kind of a place, too—the greatest little family down I've ever run across, 'specially at this time of year. They make a lot of New Year in my burg; everybody keeps open house, and everybody goes around to see everybody else in the old style. And the New Year's dinners—oh, boy! with a roast goose in the middle of the table!"

"Going to be home?" inquired Tillie.

"Going to be home? Say, kid," (Tillie might have been the junior of Jackie by as much as three months) "it's nearly 700 miles from here to the old town. And besides"—all the banter was gone out of the boy's eyes now—"there isn't any home there any more. It's three years tomorrow since there was an old-time New Year's dinner at our house. Last year I was in France, waiting for a ship to bring me home. The year before I was in camp. The first year my mother died and the next one poor old dad flickered out. This year—oh, well," the boy shook his head and tried to bring back the reckless fun into his voice, "if you can't eat goose with me, folks, you can eat slum at the hash counter; what's the odds?"

But Tillie, who was a woman to the tips of her fingers, knew that the odds were great. And a great mother feeling came and brooded in her bosom along with the quite different feeling that the presence of this cheery, hand some boy always set stirring there. Her eyes were softly tender as they followed the agile figure of the young fireman hastening trainward.

On New Year's day as Jackie Follet climbed upon the accustomed stool and nodded friendlily to Tillie, there was a change from the accustomed routine. Tillie did not ask what her customer would have. Instead, she leaned over the counter and said: "Keep it mum, Jackie; I've got your dinner all ready for you in the hot closet."

Two great slices from the breast of a wonderful corn-fed goose and one of the fat bird's stumpy legs, and thick, luscious gravy, redolent of celery and chestnuts and mushrooms, and a huge spat of bread crumb dressing, aromatic with spices and unctuous with the waddling fatness of the creature, and creamy, fluffy mashed potatoes, and little onions boiled to exquisite tenderness, and a bit of yellow turnip, and half a dozen sprigs of dwarf celery, crisp as zero snow, topped with a giant slab of such mince pie as the Cornwall station restaurant had never dreamed of before. That's the kind of dinner that the little waitress set before her guest.

And because he was a heedless, homeless boy starving for the home fleshpots Jackie had reveled half way through it before he began to think. But because he was a man he did begin to think at last. And presently, when he could get Tillie's ear privately, he said to her: "Tillie, how did you do it? You haven't any more home than I have, have you?" And he kept at her until she had to admit that she had bought the goose and made a deal with Mrs. Jaynes, with whom she roomed, to cook the dinner. Tillie to have one full portion sent to the station by the Jaynes boy promptly at noon.

"And what do you eat?" inquired Jackie, with an odd, intent look in his eyes.

"Oh, my regular lunch here," replied Tillie. And right then Jackie's time was up and he had to run. But before he went he leaned over the counter and whispered hurriedly: "Don't have any date tomorrow evening, Tillie. I'm coming to see you."

Do you suppose it was just the goose and "fixings" that touched the heart of Jackie Follet and was responsible for his taking Tillie, before another New Year rolled around, back to that friendly little town of his 700 miles away, and with her making again a home of his old house that he could not bear to look at when he came back from France? Or was it the magic of that brooding mother sense that in every real woman's heart reaches out to the man she craves, and stirs his appetite, not for meat and drink alone, but for the manna of home life, and the sparkling waters of love?

TRAGIC END OF WATER HOG

South American Visitor to England Victim of Its Fighting Spirit and Gamekeeper's Temper.

Two years ago a large and intelligent water hog from South America, tired of the local British menagerie which exploited himself and his brethren, crept away and took up his abode in a pond at Manning's Heath, Sussex.

There, says London Answers, he lived a hermitlike existence, swimming and diving and scrambling along the fringe of the pond by way of exercise, and harming no man, until, quite recently, a young foal disputed his claim to the lake. The three-feet-long water hog had the impudence to chase the foal, and suffered death at the hands of a gamekeeper for his misdemeanor.

The hog's life in the Sussex pond is regarded as all the more strange because few of his species have survived the English climate. Such creatures abound on the river banks in South America, and, while possessing the skin and bristles of an ordinary land hedgehog, can swim and dive like a fish, often remaining under water for lengthy periods. They have long, curiously molded teeth, which enable them to grind to pulp the vegetable matter that forms their sustenance, and allow it to pass down the very narrow passage of their throat. They bark and growl like dogs and are altogether unpleasant animals when roused. The Manning pond specimen was regarded by the villagers as quite harmless, however, and they deplored its untimely end.

Men Who Are Listened To.

When you speak only what you're sure of you will get a hearing. Every assembly has in it some few fellows who take upon themselves the directing of affairs. They know just what ought to be done next and are free to tell it. They have opinions on every subject and want people to know that they are thinkers. And it's amusing to see how often their opinions are listened to with varying interest and calmly disregarded by the people they were supposed to benefit. We have even heard the presiding officer ask the opinion of some quiet man who has been a silent listener, and that opinion lead to definite action on the part of the assembly. In fact, it often happens that after the mouthers have mauled the matter to the limit a few words from one who speaks only when he has something to say disposes of the matter.—Exchange.

Jap "Co-Ed's" Costumes.

A new school costume for three large schools for girls in Tokio is reported in a Japan society bulletin. The freshmen girls will have jackets fashioned of pink material and skirts of violet. The second-year girls will wear blue jackets and third-year maidens, in virtue of their greater maturity and advancing wisdom, will be privileged to have their coats cut from brown cloth. The Tokio schools making the change are the Girls' Commercial school, the Yamawaki Girls' high school, and Atomi Girls' high school.

Light and Power for Farms.

A new lighting and power plant for the farm discards the usual storage battery, is designed for starting at any one of four distant points, and is claimed to avoid wasting energy. Its capacity is the equivalent of 30 25-volt lamps. On turning on one light, the generator runs at speed just sufficient for that light, and more lights cause an automatic electric governor to open the engine carburetor just enough for the additional load. A single-cylinder gasoline engine drives the 750-watt multipolar generator. The generator has two commutators, and one winding for the 110-volt lighting current with another for a six-volt self-starter.

STARTING IN RIGHT

By DORA MOLLAN

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Halton Jones was a New Yorker born and bred. A little of the city-dweller's assurance crept into his voice while his arm found its way around Ruth's slender waist. "You do love me, don't you, Ruth?"

"Yes," replied Ruth Redfield, tremblingly but confidently.

So they settled their future under the maple trees by the spring, with an August moon looking down. And the transforming light of that heavenly body slurred kindly over the crude and lovely aspects of the little New England farm, emphasizing the inherent beauty of the scene. To Ruth that moonglow typified Hal's love for her, which, shining down the pathway of life, would transfigure every sordid detail.

The next day Hal's vacation visit in the vicinity came to an end and he returned to the city. "I'm going to plug hard and make good, Ruth, and just as soon as I can save enough so we can start in right we will be married."

Ruth, wonderfully happy, acquiesced. She wanted time to dream over this new element in her life and there would be so many things for her clever Yankee fingers to work on as she dreamed! Things for herself and the new home in the big city.

Mrs. Redfield took the news calmly; life had taught her the futility of taking any news otherwise. "You tell Joe," Ruth requested, not meeting her mother's eye. And Mrs. Redfield did that evening after Ruth had gone to her room. Joe Hodges sat across the table plunged in study, for he attended a nearby agricult[illegible] school, doing the rough work on the Redfield farm for his board.

Mrs. Redfield didn't raise her eyes from the rags she was sewing, nor did she reply to the boy's choking, "I'm glad for her." But after a while she walked around the table and put her hand on the bowed head. "All things turn out for the best Joe," she said. "Good-night."

Then Joe Hodges, clenching his toil-rough[illegible] ened hands, decided to carry on; to stick to his plans for the future—with one change. There would be no woman in them; if Ruth was not for him then he wanted no one. It was characteristic of Joe that he never considered leaving the Redfield farm but stuck on, working harder than ever and trying to be to Ruth as a kindly, helpful brother.

Ruth informed her friends that her wedding would take place the following spring. "Hal wants time to save enough so we can start in right," she would add proudly. "We're going to have one of the most modern apartments, so I won't be a slave to housework."

There followed busy days when Ruth, singing over the task, dyed various scraps of material in bright colors and cunningly fashioned them into gay little rugs. Then word came from Hal that he feared the rugs she described wouldn't fit at all in the sort of apartment he had planned to take. Ruth put them away regretfully; but in a few days bits of white material and dainty laces took their place and the singing was resumed.

After another lette[illegible] from Hal these vanished also. Ruth elaborately explained to her mother that Hal had advised saving her money and buying everything in the city at the last moment. "He says styles change so rapidly one can't be sure so far ahead that things will be right." Mrs. Redfield's lips came together in a straight line, but she offered no remonstrance in words.

As spring drew near Hal received a raise. "Everything looks fine for the big event to come off as per schedule," he wrote. On the heels of this followed less cheerful news. The rents of model apartments had advanced faster than his salary. Didn't Ruth think they had better wait till they could afford what they wanted? Ruth answered "yes," as she was so evidently expected to do.

Next Ruth busied her restless hands with curtains, hemstitching them with infinite care, happy in the belief that they couldn't fail to fit into any simple home. But Hal vetoed them, too, when he came on for his summer vacation. "Nobody uses plain white curtains now," he explained with elaborate kindness. "They must match the color scheme of the room they are designed for. We'll buy them."

Joe overhearing this, itched for a chance to lay his strong hands on the slender city chap; to take him by the collar and knock some sense into his head, or some nonsense out.

When Hal left he assured Ruth that they would be married by Christmas sure. But the girl's interest in things seemed to lag. Christmas drew near; Hal wrote that the firm declined to give him a vacation then. Whenever Joe's eyes fell on Ruth's listless face, he harbored thoughts akin to murder. But Mrs. Redfield's words recurred to him: "All things turn out for the best."

So Joe just plodded ahead and carried out his plans. In March he finished his agricultural course and bought an abandoned farm nearby. There was a dilapidated house on the property, and into this he moved. Another hired man took his place on the Redfield farm.

Ruth was working feverishly making Joe's house comfortable for him. She brought out the gay rag rugs and the hemstitched white curtains. When Joe attempted to remonstrate she answered that she had no use for them and not enough to do to keep her busy.

When the house was as complete as she could make it, Ruth formed the habit of spending an hour or two each day putting it in order for its lonely occupant. She chose the time when Joe was at work in the fields. One day he returned unexpectedly and found her there, sitting in the middle of his kitchen floor, alternately plying a scrubbing brush and wiping tears from her eyes.

"What's wrong now, Ruth?" Joe demanded. "Tell me and I'll fix it for you somehow." His tone augured ill for an offending person; it was well for Halton Jones, just then, that he was many miles away.

"You ought to get married, Joe. I—I can't come to fix the house for you any more."

"You're going to be married soon yourself?" Joe brought the words out with difficulty. Then he added bitterly, "It will be some time before I can 'start right.' My wife will have to work some, I fear."

"The Lord worked, Joe. He made the world; he didn't buy it out of a department store! And I'll never marry any man who won't let me work; so there! I wrote Hal so last week."

"Then marry me," said Joe Au[illegible] Bah Jiminy.

MADE WATERS SEEM ALIGHT

San Diego Citizens Once Greatly Disturbed by Visit of Countless Millions of Annelidas.

One evening in the February of a recent year the citizens of San Diego, Cal., experienced quite a scare, almost a panic. About eight o'clock the calm surface of their beautiful bay presented such a tremendous phosphorescent glow that many persons living on the bordering hillsides became greatly alarmed, rushed to their telephones and anxiously called up the fire department to inquire as to the cause of masses of fiery lights that gleamed on the water.

Definite knowledge relative to the strange sight was not fully obtained, however, until the next day, when the chief of the state marine biological station, after closely examining a bucketful of the eellike worms, which had been captured by an old skipper on the ferryboat, explained that the bright light was caused by millions of small reptiles known as annelidas that had suddenly come to the surface. He further mentioned that these strange creatures had a habit of making periodical visits about once every 15 years.

From eight o'clock to midnight the broad harbor in front of the city appeared to be filled to the brim with luminous snakes, its waters being literally alive with wriggling phosphorescent reptiles, averaging about two feet in length, their slender, flat bodies resembling shiny blades of matted grass. So thickly massed were the squirming reptiles that the steam launches from the anchored warships in the harbor were apparently barely able to make headway through them and many thousands of the lustrous snakes were killed by being crushed in the propellers of the vessels.

A RESOLUTION

By A. W. Peach

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

She looked at Marsden with dark tender eyes filled with determination. "We must not talk about it any more. I am sorry, for I do love you, you know. But I have had dreams since a mere girl of doing wonderful things with my music. So I have made up my mind. Today is New Year's and I am going to begin to work for just one end, Phil."

"A New Year's resolution, then," he answered gently. "A sad one for me."

"I know—you have been good to me, but—but it has reached a point where—where—I get to thinking of you." The rose in her cheeks deepened. "And a home with you. Now I must put such thoughts away. Think how my friends and father and mother would feel! They have such plans for me. To marry and settle down—I can't think of it! So you must promise to say—say no more to me about—about loving me."

He rose to go. "Beth, if it troubles you, I will—"

"It doesn't trouble me, Phil. I have loved to have you. But my mind is certain. Tomorrow I am sailing for Italy—"

"No," he said hurriedly. "You don't mean that."

"Listen," she said tenderly. "I must leave you now or later. And I want it to be soon. It will be easier."

He stood staring at a future without her—her merry, sweet voice that was finer music to him than to anyone in the world. Her bright head, her dark tender eyes, her ways, every one familiar and dear to him.

She read his thoughts and put one white, slim arm around his neck. "Phil, you dear old chum, think how proud you will be of me, one of these days, when I return and you come to hear me."

He smiled down into her eyes. "I know where I would rather hear you sing—in my home, some evening, some little song such—"

"Hush!" she said quickly, drawing from him, her eyes pleading for his silence.

"I will. But, Beth, tonight you must go with me to the concert at the conservatory. Will you?"

"Will I?" She gave him by way of answer what, under other circumstances, would have developed into a hug.

Marsden left her and walked slowly homeward to his apartments. The world had suddenly gone to ashes about him. Off for Italy with that birdlike voice of hers. He had often thought of her as a thrush—a lover of hidden and secret places; almost within his reach yet beyond it.

He found his chosen friend and boon companion sprawled out in a big chair in his den smoking and reading. Stevens jumped up at the sight of his face.

"What's the matter, old chap?" he ejaculated.

Seating himself Marsden told the story—a story punctuated by whistled comments on Steven's part. At the story's end Stevens leaned back.

"Phil, that is a blow. I had just begun to count on having a real home to drop into—yours and the lady's with the merry eyes. Ye gods, that is a stunner!"

Stevens drew on his pipe and mused, looking now and then at his silent friend in the club chair who seemed to be far away in some dismal valley of his own thoughts.

Suddenly, Stevens struck his pipe with decision against the grate of the fireplace and jumped to his feet. "I suppose the party is on tonight at the conservatory?"

"It is," Marsden said. "I'll see you and Alice there."

"You bet," was Stevens' answer as he hurried out.

As if with a plan already in mind he hurried down the street, boarded a car that whirled its way into the residential part of the city. Before a quaint, rambling apartment house he alighted, and went to the door.

He searched for a name, and a little later found himself shaking hands with a short, pleasant-faced Italian.

"Donaluzzi, I have a tale for your ears," Stevens announced.

"All right," the Italian answered. "Any man who plays a 'cello as you, can tell me any tale an' I listen."

Stevens told him swiftly of the situation between Marsden and the girl he whole-heartedly loved. "Now, here is the point: Beth is your pupil. I have a plan."

He proceeded to unfold it. The Italian alternately blinked, shook his head, gasped, refused, and finally nodded. "You say she really loves him and he loves her," he asked.

"Man, it is the love I would die for if I could have it," Stevens said firmly.

"Consider it settled," Donaluzzi answered.

At eight o'clock, Stevens and Alice, the girl who might some day marry him, as she said, "when he takes life seriously enough to propose without working in a joke," Marsden and bright-haired Beth were in their seats.

The concert began, but Marsden's thoughts were not on the music but close to the bright head at his shoulder; and she, too, glanced up at him once in a while, shyly, quickly.

In one of the intermissions, an Italian voice came to them saying softly to some friend, "Yes, Miss Elsworth has a fine voice—yes, but not a voice to—to—train for the operatic stage, the great role—ah, no. To sing at home—before friends, yes. But that's all."

The singer on the stage began. Marsden was conscious of a tense little body at his side and of his own astonishment. A nudge in his side drew his attention. He looked down. "Phil, is that—is that Donaluzzi? Look around and see!"

He looked and nodded. She relaxed.

He suffered during the rest of the concert—suffered for her, for he knew how much faith she placed upon Donaluzzi's opinion.

After the concert they went to Stevens' favorite dining place. She played her part bravely there. Even Marsden's eyes that knew her every mood did not sense her inner hurt. Nor did he guess until he was drawn into the little reception room of her home and she stood, wide-eyed before him, slim and graceful in her evening wraps.

"You heard what Donaluzzi said—" she began.

"Sweetheart, don't think of that! He is no judge. Go to Italy! I know you'll make good!" he urged.

She drew away, folding her evening robe about her. "Oh, so you want me to go!"

He stared at her, dumb, puzzled. Then she smiled ever so slightly. With a rush he caught her in his arms and she surrendered her trip to Italy— and herself.

Then she explained in something of a smothered voice, "I'm glad he told me, dear, for I've got a good excuse now. Now you must go. And think, you can come again!" Her good-night was given, not said.

Once more in his apartments he found Stevens. "How under the sun! Say, that was lucky old Donaluzzi was there or I would have lost her," Marsden said smiling.

Stevens lifted an eyebrow. "Luck! That so! My boy, I saw him myself and put it up to him. I had little difficulty, for he wanted to tell her not to go himself. It was no kind of a New Year's resolution for her to make. They always get busted anyhow. Old man, look sane for a moment and let me congratulate you."

Fried Onions and Apples.—Slice two onions very thin and cook in a tablespoonful of hot fat until yellow, then add half a dozen sliced tart apples; cook until soft, adding a bit of water and fat if needed. Just before serving add a teaspoonful of sugar. Serve with roast pork, pork sausages or pork steak or chops. If one does not like the onions or desires variety core the apples without peeling, slice in half-inch slices and fry carefully not to break them. Serve with chops, making an overlapping ring of the apples around the chops.

Add one tablespoonful of cornstarch to each cupful of flour in making cake. It improves the grain greatly.

Buy your spring coat, suit, dress or skirt at Seiller's, and save money.

NEWS HAPPENINGS

The Seillers basketball team defeated the Martlin tailors last night in the C. C. League, 26 to 17, in a fast and exciting game. Seillers played a swift game and outplayed the Martlins. The Seillers occupy first place in the league. The Bates-Shamrocks have a postponed game next Wednesday night. If the Shamrocks beat the Bates, Seillers will remain in first place, but if Bates beat Shamrocks, they will play Seillers for the championship. This is the fastest league in the city.

After the regular meeting of Hilltop Lodge No. 662, I. O. O. F. Monday night the Committee on Refreshments invited those in attendance around the banquet tables, which had been elaborately prepared for an elaborate "feed," to which they all responded heartily. Wyman's Orchestra discoursed music for the occasion, Mr. Buier sank two solos, and Ralph Herbert rendered two piano solos. Odd Fellows from out of the city gave interesting talks. At a late hour all joined in singing, "Till We Meet Again," bid each other good night, with acknowledging that the Refreshment Committee and Orchestra had certainly showed all a good time.

A group of friends from the Hilltop were entertained last Friday evening at the home of Mr. Charles Sharp, 255 Tulane Road. Those present were: Miss Verna Peake, Miss Ruth Young, Miss Helen Kunzi, Miss Doris Barnes and Miss Iris Clover. Messrs. Lauren Turner, Julius Fledderjohann, Robert Wilson, Charles Harra, Raymond Bidwell, Reginald Deitrick, Lester Bishop and Charles Sharp. A very enjoyable time was had by all.

SIGN HERE. WHY?

Because four years ago in Glenwood park they built a "shelter house," gym. floor, one-quarter mile track, and a swimming pool, as large as the one at Ohio State. Because street was short, one window for ventilation and the waste pipe was wrong, the pool has never been opened. The Hilltop boys must go to the quarry to learn to swim, where every year one or more drown.

The Public Recreation Department will furnish an instructor to teach swimming free to boys and girls.

Now Hilltop mothers and fathers back up your boys and girls by signing the petition they will bring to you and you will have a safe swimming hole for the kids.

New spring caps for young men $2 to $3.50. Chas. Houx Furnishing Store.

On Tuesday evening, February 17, Mrs. Emma Alkire delightfully entertained with a surprise party at her home, Apple St., honoring her niece, Miss Marie Buell, whose eleventh birthday anniversary fell on that date. Miss Marie was the recipient of many presents, tokens of true friendship of 18 of her youthful friends who spent the evening with her in enjoying mirthful games. Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served by the charming hostess.

The Straphang

The revival services at Glenwood will be long remembered by the strength and power with which the gospel plan was presented and by the genuine, wholesome, spiritual response awakened by the old time religious appeal. The "old time religion" will prove the "saving power" in this modern day so long as it attracts and holds such strong advocates as T. M. Anderson.

The Strap Hanger wants to save that "hour of daylight." Here's to our Junior councilman. All in favor say "Aye."

STRAP HANGER

J. B. B. girls will meet at the home of Misses Earl, 137 E. Burgess Ave., Thursday, Feb. 26, to organize a Bible class.

Mrs. R. W. Leibensperger, 459 S. Burgess Ave., is recovering from the flu.

Mrs. M. E. Swanson is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Walter P. Castoe, Ridgeway, Ohio. Rev. Castoe is in a hospital at Canton, Ohio, recovering from an operation for appendicitis.

Mrs. J. A. Hill, 166 N. Harris, attended a dinner party last Thursday given by Mrs. M. B. Loos, at her home, 1398 E. Long St. in honor of her sister, Mrs. Charles Schneider of Toledo.

The election of officers of the Hilltop Improvement Association for the ensuing year will be held at West Broad St. School, Wednesday evening, March 3, 1920.

All friends of the association and parents of the pupils of the school are invited and urged to attend, as an interesting program has been prepared and matters of interest are to be discussed.

The Hilltop is bound to grow very rapidly in the future and it is very important that we have an organization of Hilltop people to help push things along and the Hilltop Improvement Association is an organization for that purpose. Come out and help boost all you can.

Child Relief Fund

The Hilltop Child Relief Fund is growing each week. The total received up to the present writing is $85.00. This will go a long way toward caring for those poor starving forsaken children upon whom effects of the awful war just past has fallen with a heavy hand. Can anyone read of or think of those poor little innocent children gradually wasting away over there without extending them a helping hand, be it ever so small an amount?

At the new home of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Matson on N. Warren Ave., Mrs. Matson and Mrs. W. K. Merriman were hostesses at a delightful George Washington party for the members and their husbands of the Hilltop Embroidery Club, Friday evening, Feb. 20th. The house was appropriately decorated with hatchets and red, white and blue trimmings. The guests were furnished with paper hats to correspond. Interesting games were played and a delightful lunch was served to the following: Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Shaffer, Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Wells, Mr. and Mrs G. A. Payne, Dr. and Mrs. T. S. Fox, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Seiller, Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Irwin, Mr. and Mrs. W. Rankin, Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Gantz, Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Merriman and Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Matson.

Mr. Jordan's class of boys in Hoge Memorial Sunday school contributed $5.00 toward the starving children fund this week. The boys who are nine and ten years old earned most of this money and were much interested in giving this to this worthy cause. These boys also earned $10.00 at Christmas time and gave it to the Volunteers for work among the more unfortunates of our city. That is putting Christianity into action. If this class will maintain that spirit till these boys reach manhood, Hoge Memorial will have the honor of producing a bunch of the best men in Columbus.

Mr. Ira Russell, 158 N. Warren Ave., has returned from a visit at Washington, D. C. His brother, Robert, who has been located in that city accompanied him home for an indefinite stay.

The Ladies' Auxiliary to the Federation of Labor will hold an open meeting and present a program and a lunch Thursday evening at Bear's Hall. 34½ E. Rich St. All women and girls interested in labor movement are invited to attend. Would like to see some of our brother union men. Come all and have a good time.

Mrs. G. W. Matson will entertain the members of the Hilltop Embroidery club to luncheon at 12:30 next Wednesday, March 3rd. after which the regular business will be transacted.

Miss Nelle C. Brannon, of Circleville, O. and Mr. Elmer Reynolds of Columbus were quietly married Monday, February 16th. Rev. G. J. Troutman performed the ceremony. Mrs. John R. Stout of Circleville and Mr. Bernard Brannon of Katanning, Pa., sister and brother of the bride were the only attendants. After spending several days with relatives Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds will be at home to their friends at 935 Dennison Ave. The bride is a sister of Mrs. J. Arthur Lytle, 382 S. Warren Ave.

West High School Alumni Association presents Edith and Norma Gibson, reader and impersonator of Wynters School of Expression in recital Tuesday evening, March 2nd in West High School Auditorium. They are the daughters of Mrs. Hope White Gibson, of 142 N. Ogden Ave. They will be assisted by Miss Lelia White, soprano and Mr. Claude Kilworth pianist and composer.

HILL CREST BAPTIST CHURCH

Morning worship 10:30. Preaching by the pastor.

Evening service 7 p. m. Preaching by pastor. Subject, "Barriers That Block the Way to God." In this message the pastor will deal with the modern conception of sin. Is sin a necessity in man's development as evolution says? Is it a disease as some psychologists say? Is it just ignorance? Does our heredity and environment fix our lives? Are we morally responsible? How can a man win out in spite of all these influences?

Tomorrow night, Friday, February 27th, the weather man, Mr. W. H. Alexander will give us his famous stereopticon lecture on "The Wonders of the Atmosphere." This will be entertaining, interesting and instructive. Every intelligent person should hear this lecture. No charge but silver offering taken. Specially prepared government slides illustrating the lecture.

It will be forty-five years on the 28th of this month since Rev. George William Lose was ordained to the holy ministry. This event will be commemorated in St. John's church, Burgess Ave. on next Sunday evening, 7 o'clock. On that occasion Rev. R. E. Galloway, pastor of Grace Lutheran church, Oakwood Ave., whom pastor Lose baptized in the early part of his ministry, and Dr. C. B. Gohdes, a co-laborer in the editing of the Lutheran Youth, a sixteen page weekly, will speak. Mrs. Fred Raether Miss Dorothy H. Lose and Dr. C. H. Lose, as also the St. John's Choir will sing.

Besides editing the juvenile periodicals of the Evangelical Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio for nearly 36 years, pastor Lose has written approximately one million three hundred thousand words for publication in book form.

Rev. Lose moved to the Hilltop last August a year ago. His work as pastor of St. John's has been signally blessed. About sixty members have been added to the congregation and the attendance at Sunday school, morning and evening and week-day services is quite encouraging.

For your Sunday dinner try home made pies and cakes. Sold by the Cheerful Workers of Hilltop Church of Christ at Keller's Paper Store, near Broad and Oakley.

AT LEAST GOT SOMETHING

Chaplain, Unable to Procure All That Was on His List, Did the Best He Could.

Father Duffy's life was at stake. Father Duffy was shepherd of as wild and rollicking a regiment of Irishmen as ever rushed a Boche machine gun nest or struggled with a foreign tongue to make a French colleen understand. Father Duffy reached Remagen with the One Hundred Fifth infantry to find the place as bare of army extras as a miser's pantry.

Plainly the good father had to get something for his flock. But he was unable to get to Coblenz to get it—that is, he couldn't get a pass. So he went A. W. O. L.

When he reached the headquarters town of the Third army he dug up the secretary of the Knights of Columbus and yelled for help. The secretary told him to make out a list of things the flock needed. Father Duffy went to it. He overlooked nothing and when the list was completed it looked like a suffrage petition.

The secretary then took Father Duffy to the Knights of Columbus warehouse. "We're having a little transportation difficulty," said the secretary, "and most of our stuff is still to come through. I don't know what we have."

But the One Hundred Sixty-Fifth's chaplain figured that even if he obtained one-half of the stuff on his list his outfit would be satisfied. It would be something.

They reached the warehouse, went inside and rummaged around considerably. Then they came out again.

Father Duffy carried in one hand two pictures, in brown sepia, of General John J. Pershing. In the other he had a deck of playing cards.—Stars and Stripes.

The Great Auk.

The great auk could not fly. Its little wings resembled fins. But it swam hundreds of miles out of the bays in spring and back again in the autumn to and from the hatching places. It was helpless on land and a prey to any enemy larger than itself. Some naturalists used to claim that the auk came as far south as the coast of Maine, but in the opinion of most authorities the bird went no further than Newfoundland. It is just possible that the bones discovered by ornithologists farther south may have been conveyed there in the guano, when it was an article of commerce.

LIKE CURES LIKE

By DORA MOLLAN

(©, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

John Nevins was having lunch at his club when excited exclamations from four young men seated at the next table caught his attention. The youths jumped up and crowded around the window. Being humanly curious, Nevins turned about and looked out on the street. A youngish woman, modishly dressed, was about to turn the corner. The wind blew smartly. "Oh, boy!" exclaimed one of the young men—he had Celtic red hair—"the Lord is good to the Irish!" John Nevins clenched his hands at what he saw till there were dents in his palms. He favored the backs of the absorbed youths with one baleful glare, then turned abruptly away from his unfinished luncheon and left the club. But on the way back to the office an inborn sense of humor came to his rescue and he chuckled aloud. He had had an inspiration.

At five minutes to nine on the following morning, when Viola Nevins appeared at the office of the Nevins family physician, it was plain that something had seriously upset the usual calm poise of the lady's manner. Also it was evident to Dr. Balfour that she hardly expected him to believe what she proceeded to relate concerning her husband.

Now Dr. Balfour had known John Nevins much longer than had Mrs. Nevins, and, though Viola would have resented any such assertion, felt that he understood him much better. Therefore it was with very little misgiving that he stated his opinion.

"No, I hardly think your husband is losing his mind, though the actions do seem peculiar, I must admit. My advice: Keep calm; act as though nothing unusual were happening, but watch him closely. If he develops other eccentricities let me know."

Some hours later Mrs. Nevins awaited John's return from the office. Seated before the library fire, she was comfortable in body but uncomfortable in mind. The latest fashion magazine failed to distract her thoughts from incidents of the previous evening, even though it exploited a brand-new fashion detail at which Viola ordinarily would have gasped with joy. Being the first to introduce a new style in her own home town had grown to be more than a fad with Mrs. Nevins; it had become a fixed principle. The click of the latchkey heralded the approach of the man of the house. A word of greeting, a connubial kiss, and John Nevins departed upward to freshen for dinner as was his wont. "Nothing unusual about his manner so far," Viola reassured herself as she awaited his returning footsteps.

They came tap-tap, on the polished hardwood of the stairs. Viola felt her fears justified. Hastily she reminded herself that the vain expostulations and half hysterical pleadings of the evening before must not be repeated. Dr. Balfour's advice had been to keep calm, and calm she kept as John Nevins bobbled into the room, his feet, unusually small for a man of his size, encased in exaggeratedly high-heeled pumps, resplendently buckled. He addressed his wife with matter-of-fact seriousness.

"If I don't make faster progress than this, learning to manage these things, it will be days yet before I'll have the confidence to wear them to the office."

At this development of ultimate purpose Mrs. Nevins gave one horrified gasp. Then her attention was diverted to the imperative need of standing between John and the maid as the latter appeared in the doorway to announce dinner. When the girl had departed kitchenward in search of soup, Viola offered her arm as an aid in negotiating the perilous combination of rugs and polished floors. John scorned it.

Throughout the dinner, much to Viola's relief, John kept his feet well under the table—she had such a horror of the servants talking! Also his conversation was absolutely sane. Mrs. Nevins almost began to doubt the evidence of her own senses about the shoes. But no; it was all true; for when the meal was over there was John, mincing his way slowly to the library door, upon those horrible heels. Viola waited for him to disappear through it before she rang for the maid. Then, even as her hand found the bell, there came a crash from the library—and silence.

Instantly she realized what had happened. Also that she must get there first and get rid of the ridiculous footwear before the servants arrived. If the worst should transpire there must be no gossip about "queer actions of poor Mr. Nevins" to go the rounds. Viola flew—to find her apprehensions justified, and John lying motionless on the library floor.

When Dr. Balfour responded promptly to Mrs. Nevins' distressed 'phone call, the master of the house was still unconscious. Blood flowed from a cut on his head. The physician had the injury dressed in no time, waved the servants out of the room and said: "It's a trifling scalp wound. He is merely knocked out and may come to any moment now. What happened?"

Mrs. Nevins, in mute explanation, produced from under the davenport, where she had hurriedly hidden them, the evidence at once of the cause of the accident and of her husband's unbalanced state.

"Um-m!" remarked Dr. Balfour, "haven't I seen you wear shoes much like these yourself?"

Mrs. Nevins resented the tone of the inquiry. It seemed to put her on the defensive. "Certainly," she answered; "but since these are women's shoes, will you please tell me why I shouldn't wear similar ones? The strange thing is a man's wanting to wear them, it seems to me."

Because Mrs. Nevins was looking straight—and somewhat defiantly—at Dr. Balfour she just here missed something which that worthy gentleman saw. During his wife's speech John Nevins had opened his eyes, looked at his physician—and winked.

"Rather small of Viola to object to my wearing shoes just like hers, don't you think, doctor," he interjected suddenly from the couch, "especially when she has taken to wearing socks precisely like mine? I came a cropper tonight, but I'll learn how to manage the cussed things yet—and give the girls at the women's club something to laugh about when I go by. We can't let the men's club have all the fun and free shows, can we, doctor?"

"John," cried Viola, half laughing in her boundless relief that it was all a joke after all, and not a case of incipient dementia; also with her arms tight around her husband's neck, "I had no idea you saw me that day—or would mind it so much. And to think you might have killed yourself trying to cure me. Why, John, dear, you are more to me than all the fashions that ever were invented. And I'll—I'll go looking like a dud hereafter if you want me to."

"You couldn't," said John, "not if you tried."

Which tactful remark closed a painful incident in the happy life of the Nevinses. And that old wheeze about history repeating itself, is, so far as it relates to Mrs. Nevins' socks, a fib.

THE PARIAH

By S. B. HACKLEY

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Lydia Bromley dropped her big corn-cutter's knife to listen to the coo of a mourning dove in the far side of the cane field. The time of killing frosts was near and Adial Booth had be-sought her to help cut his cane—a man's job, but all the young fellows of the neighborhood were either in France or on the way; besides, she needed the work.

"Oh, little dove—oh, happy little dove" — the woman unconsciously spoke aloud, "wish me happiness, too!' Wish me miles away from these cruel people on the nice, big farm, with cows and pigs and flocks of fowls that would bring in a living that wouldn't keep me tied to the ax, chopping wood all winter, and bound to the hoe, chopping weeds all summer, with all my leisure time being hired man to the neighbors decent enough to hire me! Oh, little dove, if I could, right this minute, I'd run away and play and look for Dutchman's Pipe in the brown leaves in the woods over there!"

Just behind the hedge that bordered the cane field, a lean, brown-faced man stood. Lindsay Temple had come up the little hill path back of Lydia's cottage that sat below on the road, in the midst of the two acres that belonged to it, stopping on his way to town to speak to her about some quilting she'd agreed to do when the outer work was done, for, since his wife's death, four years before, Lindsay had lived alone and fended for himself.

Listening, Lindsay gazed curiously at her from behind the leafy screen.

Gazed at Her From Behind the Leafy Screen.

A hundred times he had seen her, and though her straight erectness, her blue eyes, sparkling with a proud independence, and her clear, pink skin—at fifty, smooth as a girl's—had always appeared to him as pleasantly different from his neighbor women, he saw her now with new vision. Unseen, he went back down the hill to where he had left his buggy.

Six years before, in hope, Lydia had brought her consumptive husband and her young daughter from Vermont. But Park Bromley had died in their third month in Tennessee, and Lydia learned the misery that comes of misunderstanding.

A spring, ice-cold and deep, ran out from under a mighty rock by her front door, and passersby, men and women, often stopped for a drink. And Lydia did not consider it a detriment to her character to talk to the men, easily, pleasantly, of the affairs of the day—even to invite them, as she did the women, to sit sometimes for a little time on her porch.

But in that section of the country it was not the custom of the women folk to converse much with men, and this innocent sociable practice of Lydia's came under bitterest condemnation. Fanciful tales were circulated about that "bold Northern woman," and, in the course of time, she found herself ostracized.

And Lydia, become a pariah, hid the hurt in her friendly heart, and met them who ceased to speak in passing, with a proud mien of defiance.

Laura, the daughter, found occupation in a town in another county, and Lydia stayed alone—the only bright spots in her life her love of the outdoors and the occasional visits of her daughter and of the storekeper's wife and daughter, good women, educated and cultivated.

Lindsay, on his slow way to town, wondered what had come over him. He felt strangely young, the mellow autumn air he breathed was like the wind off the blossoming grape in May.

"She ain't any more like the majority of these snuff-dippin' women hereabouts than a thrush is like a mud-duck!" he told himself. "These fools down here ain't got wisdom enough to understand she's just had different raisin' and comes from a different customed place to this. I'm a-goin' to—I'm a-goin' to—"

That evening at dusk, with infinite care not to arouse the woman in the kitchen, Lindsay left a basket of fine Concord grapes and "The Rose Garden Husband," a book he had that day bought at the drug store. He didn't quite understand the title, but it sounded good, and the clerk had told him it was a pretty love story.

That night, at his five miles' distant home, he sat until midnight, thinking. At last he rose and faced the crayon portrait caricature of the meek spirit who had been the mother of his three daughters. "Sene," he whispered, "you was a good girl and we loved one another; but, oh, Sene, you're gone and I'm lonesome—lonesome as a bear on the mountain."

He rose and went out to the grave under the maples beside the highway. Reaching down one big lean hand he reverently brushed aside the red and yellow leaves that covered the dead [illegible].

"'Twouldn't be showin' no disrespect to you, Sene, honey, ef I was to marry again?"—his voice was a pleading apology—"I wanted to tell you, Sene, I'm thinkin' of somebody. Tain't nobody about here, Sene, you ever saw—you needn't worry about it bein' one of these women hereabouts, Sene!"

Each week Lydia found a pleasing parcel on her porch, and she went about her work in happy expectation. One man of all these people was trying to tell her he respected her, admired her, wanted to marry her!

One evening at dusk, at the end of the fourth week, Lindsay knocked at her door.

"I've been a wantin' to be your beau for a month," he said bashfully, "only I was afraid you wouldn't let me be! May I come in and set for a while?"

The humility and the tenderness in his voice brought the tears to her eyes, but her tone was bitter:

"I can't let you—they'd scandalize you!"

He flushed through his tan. "It's dark now—nobody'd know—but I'd a come in broad daylight only I couldn't have no stones unjestly cast at you over me!"

"I couldn't marry anybody and live about here," she told him at last. "Now Laura's married, I'm going to sell this place Christmas and go away off somewhere."

"I were born where I live," Lindsay found himself saying; "it would pull me powerful to give it up."

That night while Lydia wept over this remark, Lindsay knelt in the frost under the maples.

"Oh, Sene, I never 'lowed to sell the place and you air a layin' on it, but Sene, I'd see the spot where you air wouldn't never be neglected. I'd see to it, Sene, dear!"

In a few days Lindsay came to Lydia with news.

"I'm thinkin' of buyin' a place down in Monroe county," he told her, "close to White Rock."

She colored with pleasure. "Laura, my girl, lives there!"

"Does she?" he said innocently.

"But your farm here, where you were born?" she breathed.

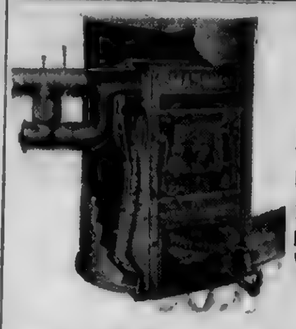
"I'm selling it on condition."

She came close to him. "Oh, Lindsay, you are giving it up—because—"

"Because I'm lovin' you better'n keepin' a parcel of ground. Say you'll marry me, and I'll go home and tell Nick Prosser he may have it, and I'll go tomorrer to White Rock and buy the farm there and set a carpenter to mendin' the house—I can git it habitable by Christmas. Maybe sooner."

The pariah's eyes grew starlike—happiness enveloped her like a golden cloud.

"You are the best man in the world, Lindsay Temple!" she cried. Lindsay drew her close in his arms.



"No, I ain't—but you air the finest woman, Lydia, darlin'!"

THE GIRL ON THE WALL

By R. RAY BAKER

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

From her place on the office wall the girl watched Oliver Randall's every move. The deep, dark eyes followed him about the room; the ruby lips smiled at him continuously.

Oliver was in love with the girl. He had always admired dark-eyed, dark-haired girls, and this one satisfied his requirements as to an ideal. He knew he would marry her if he could.

Oliver was rising rapidly in the real estate business, and in a year or two would be in more than comfortable financial circumstances. He needed a wife for an incentive, and, besides, he was lonely; for in the big city he had few companions aside from business associates.

"If I could find the right girl I'd marry her—if she'd let me," Oliver had often said, but the right one never seemed to come along. Moreover, he was one of the backward kind when it came to young women, and he doubted his ability to bring himself to the point of proposing. Women frightened him; they made him self-conscious.

Oliver Randall never had a girl—except back in the old home town of Plainwell, where he used to aspire to the hand of Irene Earle. Now Oliver, away from the old home for a year and a half, laughed at Irene, with her red hair and freckles.

But the girl on the wall—Oliver loved her deeply; at least he thought he loved her, and thought has a lot to do with it. He had never talked with her, had not even seen her outside the office. She had been presented to him by the mail carrier, and she came rolled in a cardboard tube. She was a picture on a calendar, advertising insurance.

It was not yet time for the girl on the wall to assume her duties of keeping Oliver posted regarding the dates. It was two weeks before the calendar went into effect, but Oliver could not bear to keep the girl rolled in the tube or shut in the darkness of a desk drawer.

So she was put to work fourteen days ahead of time, so that Oliver could feast his eyes on her while he worked. She inspired him.

"I must find that girl," he decided, and he conferred with an acquaintance who had something to do with the printing business, in order to ascertain whether it was physically possible to satisfy his desires. If the girl was only the child of an artist's brain his chances would be slim.

The friend's verdict was encouraging.

"She's a real girl all right," he said. "This is a half-tone engraving made from an actual photograph."

Then Oliver got to scrutinizing feminine faces that passed him on the streets and looking through cafe windows, and scanning the countenances of store clerks and movie theater audiences and elevator girls.

Of course, the quest was hopeless, but it furnished diversion for a young man who had nothing to do when he was not at the office. The only real way to learn the whereabouts of the original of the girl on the wall was to correspond with the makers of the calendar, and he could not quite bring himself to display so much inquisitiveness.

Press of business kept Oliver in the city during the Christmas holidays, but he made arrangements for spending December 31 and January 1 in the old home town. It would be his first visit since leaving the place, and while it held few attractions as a town, due to the fact that he had outgrown it, he wanted to see his parents, who had always lived there and who no doubt would complete their lives there.

He arrived on the morning of the 31st and was met by his parents in a modest automobile, in which he was conveyed to the house where he was born and grew up.

It seemed rather good to look into the little room that used to be his and still was his, in fact, for his mother kept the bed ready for his occupancy and had never touched any of his belongings except to clean them—not even a pile of read-from-cover-to-cover, out-of-date magazines.

In the afternoon Oliver went out for a walk, desirous of renewing acquaintanceships. He thought he knew everybody that lived in Plainwell, and consequently was surprised at the number of new faces. However, the town itself seemed to have undergone few changes.

"Hello, Oliver," he heard a voice behind him call as he walked along the main street. "Don't you recognize your friends?"

He turned and saw two girls standing on the walk behind him. For a moment he surveyed them, or rather one of them, who had wreaths of rich red hair flowing down over a set of black furs. From behind a black muff the face peered, and it was a rather roguish face, albeit covered with freckles.

"Irene!" he exclaimed, going to her and grasping a dainty little hand. "Irene, you certainly are looking fine." She was one girl he was not afraid of.

He talked with her several minutes, and somehow the girl on the wall seemed forgotten. It certainly did seem good to see and converse with Irene again. He had forgotten about her, but he was sure she had not been so attractive in the days when he used to live in Plainwell and call her his girl. He so far forgot the calendar girl that he asked Irene if he could call on her that evening, and she agreed with alacrity.

While walking home after meeting her on the street, Oliver suddenly came to, as it were. He realized how he had forsaken the calendar girl in his thoughts. His first act, therefore, on reaching his room was to take her from his suitcase and hang her on a nail over the bed. Still he was not quite so enthusiastic as he had been about her.

The evening passed quickly—too quickly. Irene made fudge and played the piano, and those were Oliver's two weaknesses—fudge and piano music. And how Irene could stir up sweet-tasting things with a spoon, and how she could stir up sweet-sounding things with the ivory keys.

It was a good old-fashioned evening, at least it seemed old-fashioned to Oliver, fresh from the city, and he enjoyed every minute. He fell beneath the spell of his "old girl" in the old town, and he liked it. Before either of them realized it they were speaking of things that were tinged with the sentimental, and yet they did not seem sentimental, because the two had talked of them before and made them sound matter of fact by their repetition. Of course that was a year and a half ago.

There was no resisting the Fates, and presently the conversation developed into a discussion of furniture and bungalows, not a limpid, gushing discussion, but sane and practical.

The situation did not develop into an out-and-out proposal of marriage. That would be a trifle too sudden for either of them, after this year and a half of separation; but when Oliver left Irene's home he was treading the skies, and the moon was shining as it had never shone before, and the stars were exchanging mysterious winks.

Oliver entered his room and switched on the light. The black eyes of the girl on the wall popped at him, somewhat accusingly it seemed, and her ruby lips smiled.

He stood at the foot of the bed and surveyed her critically with his eyes.

"You're a nice-looking girl," he observed, "but you can't make fudge, and you can't play the piano, and—well, really you're not of any use, except to tell me the day of the week, and the date of the month, and the month of the year; and I can keep track of them without you."

He took her from the wall.

Boom! Downstairs the old clock got into action. The boom was repeated eleven times.

With care Oliver tore the girl from the calendar. The date part he returned to his suitcase while the girl was put to repose in the waste basket.

"Red hair beats black hair all to pieces," Oliver observed as he crawled into bed ten minutes later.

Councilman M. W. Westlake said that both Mayor Thomas and Safety Director Duffy are anxious to have the swimming pool at Glenwood Shelter house opened up as soon as possible. Because of a mistake made by the architect a defect in the sewer has caused the delay of the pool being opened, but Director Duffy is working on it and hopes to have it in shape to be used soon.

Tonight the Church League basket-ball schedule ends with two games, but we will still have games at Glenwood Park. Mr. Matheny in charge of the gymnasium announces that several good programs are in store for you and above all things do not forget the entertainment for Tuesday, March the 9th. The program for Tuesday is as follows: 7:30 volley ball, North Congregational vs. Glenwood. 8:00 basket-ball, burlesque game, twenty minutes of fun. 8:20 girls game, West High vs. Glenwood Buckeyes. 8:45 Holy Family (winners of West Side championship) vs. an All Star team composed of members of other churches picked by Carlos Matheny. This entertainment is absolutely free and all are invited to come down to the Shelter house and see the fun.

Westwood Temple No. 169, Pythian Sisters held their regular meeting Wednesday evening, February 36th, with a good attendance, also a number of visitors from other temples. After the regular business was attended to a fine luncheon was served by the Entertainment Committee Brothers Hauntz and Hunter, which all enjoyed immensely. The next meeting will be held March 11th, at which all members are urged to come.

The Hilltop Child Relief Fund

The Hilltop Fund for starving children in Europe did not grow as fast during the last week as it did previously. However we have passed the $100 mark. This will take care of 20 children until harvest time comes over there. We forwarded $35.00 as a second remittance and following is a reply from the Relief Administration on receipt of same.

American Relief Administration European Children's Fund
115 Broadway, New York City
HERBERT HOOVER, Chairman
Feb. 26, 1920.

Mr. S. J. Westlake, Columbus, O.
Dear Sir: This will supplement the formal receipt which has been sent to you for the generous contribution of the Hilltop people in aid of the hungry children of Central Europe.

It is on account of such gifts as these that we are encouraged to extend our children's feeding program.

For instance, we propose, after March 1, to increase the number of children who go to the kitchens in Hungary from 100,000 to 125,000. We propose to add another 100,000 to the number being fed in Poland, and we hope we can do as well in the matter of the Austrian program.

On behalf of the hundreds of children who will be benefited through this contribution, may we express our sincere thanks to you and all the Hilltop people who have contributed.

Sincerely yours,
J. M. OSKISON.

In this situation, every dollar by which the European Children's fund is increased means a saving of child life, for it means that we can extend our relief work just that much further among the hungry, famishing children.

One 50 cent subscription to the Record will keep one child alive 10 days. All money paid on subscription between now and April 1st will go for this purpose, and your subscription account given credit therefor.

It is said 5 cents a day will keep a child from starving; and that $5.00 will guarantee the life of one till next harvest comes.

Either send it to the Record office, 2354 W. Broad St., or telephone to us and someone will call on you. Call Hilltop 701 before 4:30 p. m. or Hilltop 1652 after that time.

Conditions which have been terrible throughout the whole of the past year, and which grew rapidly worse with the coming of winter, have reached a climax in horror and suffering wholly beyond the power of description.

The situation among some three or four millions of children is particularly acute. Ill-fed and under-nourished during the years of the war, the child populations of Austria, Poland, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and the Baltic states are today face to face with actual starvation.

The Austrian and Polish situations are the worst in Europe. The city of Vienna and one or two minor cities like Innsbruck, Gratz, etc., are totally out of food supplies.

There are some 337,000 children in Vienna alone and the Children's Fund is feeding, as best it can, some 90,000 of these.

But in Poland, in Czecho-Slovakia, in Finland, in Hungary, and all the Central European countries, the need for outside food supplies immediately, if the lives of thousands of children are to be saved—is absolute. They are face to face with starvation.

MADE MOST OF GREAT GIFTS

Cicero, Famous Orator, Surely Deserved His Attainment of High Eminence in World.

Cicero, like every other great man, gives in his life's history testimony to the value and necessity of diligent culture of the mind for the attainment of eminence. His education for an orator was most laborious. He himself declared that no man ought to pretend to the character of an orator without being previously acquainted with everything worth knowing in nature and art, as eloquence unbased upon knowledge was no better than the prattle of a child. He was six-and-twenty before he considered himself properly accomplished for his profession. He had learned the rudiments and grammar and languages from the ablest teachers, gone through studies of humanity and the polite letters with the poet Archias; been instructed in philosophy by the principal professors in each sect—Phaedrus and Epicurian, Philo the Academic, and Diodotus the Stoic; acquired a perfect knowledge of law from the greatest lawyers as well as the greatest statesmen in Rome, the two Scaevolas; all of which accomplishments were but ministerial and subservient to that on which his hopes were placed—the reputation of an orator. And that he might neglect nothing to improve and polish his style, he spent the intervals of his leisure in the company of ladies, especially those whose fathers had been distinguished by a fame and reputation for elegance. —From Melmoth's "Life of Cicero."

A RED LETTER DAY AT GLENWOOD M. E. CHURCH

Two large congregations were present at the services of Glenwood M. E. Church Sunday. The morning service was devoted entirely to the reception of members. Seventy persons were received into the church making one hundred and fifty that have been received since Conference. Eighteen adult persons received the ordinance of baptism and one infant. The church now has a membership of fifteen hundred and sixty. At the evening service the pastor's sermon delivered before a large audience on the subject, "Is the Devil Still Alive?" elicited much favorable and enthusiastic comment.

A special series of Sunday evening services has been planned for the month of March. The subjects to be presented are as follows: March 7, "Clouds and Rainbow"; March 14, "A Stand for Victory"; March 21, "The Happy and the Unhappy Man"; March 28, "The Silence of God." The services will open each evening with a short song service. Special music will be rendered.

A largecompany of workers from the Railway Y. M. C. A. will conduct the services at Avondale United Brethren Church Sunday evening.

ALL'S FAIR

By R. RAY BAKER

(©, 1916, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Here's a story about a nurse who didn't marry a patient. Graduated from Sanburn Memorial hospital in the big city, with an engraved, beribboned diploma, and an R. N. after her name, Suse Hopewell accepted a position as superintendent of Belleview hospital in the small city of Rushington, and there she met David Kling.

David had never been sick a day in his life, except with the mumps and measles when he was a youngster. Nevertheless, when he saw Suse Hopewell, David decided that he needed a nurse, not because Suse was a nurse, but because Suse was Suse, and her being a nurse was just incidental.

David was proprietor of a jewelry-phonograph-sewing machine-camera store, and he first saw Suse when she entered the place on business. The business was the purchase of a sewing machine badly needed at the hospital.

Now David was a very ingenious young man, albeit somewhat reserved and backward when it came to the business of wooing. The moment he saw Suse step into the store the little engine that operated on his left side began to work queerly. As he walked toward the prospective customer he was afraid its bumping would frighten her. However, she seemed quite composed and he came to the conclusion that perhaps she had not noticed the unusual sound.

In stories all nurses are pretty, and this one is no exception in that regard. Suse had big eyes that usually appeared gray, but at times seemed shaded with deep blue. She was neither slender, short, tall nor chunky. Her hair was light brown, and while it could not be called luxuriant, there was enough of it, without paid-for additions, to be done up in a business-like, nevertheless attractive, coiffure.

"I Need a Sewing Machine."

"I need a sewing machine," Suse said, and David stopped staring and suddenly remembered what she was there for.

Once out of his daze, he tried to cover the fact that he had been in one by rapid monologue, which was rather inane, but served to make up for the time he had consumed in staring at Suse.

Suse selected a machine and paid for it, requesting that it be sent to the hospital, and after she left David drifted into a waking dream. Suse certainly got a bargain when she bought that machine, for a young man's heart was thrown in without extra charge.

The apparent hopelessness of his dream brought David out of it.

"I'm a goner," he half groaned. "But what's the use? I don't know her and there's no chance of getting acquainted unless I get sick, and then the store would go to ruin, and who wants to marry a bankrupt man? Besides, I might as well admit that I haven't enough nerve to go after her."

However, as has been said, David was an ingenious young man, and it was not long before his brain got to work on a scheme which had for its object the forming of Suse Hopewell's acquaintance, and, some distance in the future, the marrying of her.

Two sewing machines were to be delivered on the same trip, and a short time before the driver of the flivver called for them David might have been seen busy with a screw-driver about the mechanism of the one ordered by the superintendent of Belleview hospital. He might have been seen thus engaged, but he took pains to make sure that he was not.

He watched the machines leave on the truck and with a queer glitter in his eyes began straightening up the phonograph record racks.

There were no developments that day, but the next afternoon David received a call from Belleview hospital.

"The new machine I bought of you doesn't work," said a sweetly familiar voice on the wire. "I need it right now, so please send some one in a hurry to fix it."

Some one went in a hurry. David sent himself.

Suse ushered him into the presence of the obstinate machine, and he produced a screwdriver from his tool bag to remedy the trouble, of which he was the cause.

"You won't need that," smiled Suse. "It's something about the belt that's wrong."

With surprise David noted that her statement was true. Something was wrong with the belt, and the bobbin, which he intended should have become balky, worked smoothly.

As he busied himself repairing the belt, David managed to entice Suse into conversation, and when he left he felt that he had made some progress, although he was still mystified. The mystery was solved when he got back and learned that a man had been sent out to Joseph Freedman's home to repair a new machine.

"The delivery man got them mixed," David decided; but he was just as well pleased, for the broken belt had served its purpose as effectively as the bobbin might have done.

Thus did David Klinger and Suse

The Hilltop Child Relief Fund

petedly advanced and retreated over every road and field, is clear in his mind as to one fact—the children of these regions are the innocent sufferers from this calamity; there are millions of these gems of humanity who are underfed and who have been underfed for more than three years, weakened and predisposed to the diseases now prevalent in these countries. They will die by the thousands unless they receive systematic food and care provided by outside intervention. Those who survive will be the feeble and impoverished race upon whom must rest the building of the new era from which we hope so much and for which we have sacrificed so much. It is impossible to conceive of the world returning to a basis of peace and progress unless we assume the right of these children to a measure of health and strength."

Nature of the Problem

It was in connection with what Mr. Hoover terms the "second intervention of America in Europe" which occurred at the time of the armistice that he saw clearly the necessity of special aid for hundreds of thousands of children in middle and eastern Europe. This intervention was not only the problem of finding food for a Europe facing starvation but it was to find in the midst of mental and economic chaos and the struggle of a score of new democracies to establish themselves, every means available to restore some order with the help of the economic strength of America and the power of leadership among its men.

Together with the control of the disintegrated railroads and water transport or Europe, the production and distribution of coal; the resort to stimulating barter of commodities between nations where currency has broken down and other methods for the relief of a continent of nations, this intervention meant also the practical direction of a charitable hand in the saving of children so vital for the courage and strength of these peoples.

How Are 3,000,000 Children Fed?

So, as a humane act for the safeguarding of the future of these nations, Mr. Hoover set up an organization composed of competent Americans who, through the establishment of Bureaus by local governments and committees throughout the countries, have produced a system whereby a meal a day of designated food value is fed to three million children, who in body and mind and in a pitable state of under nutrition from the lack of proper food for two or three years. The schools are largely utilized for the service of the meal; otherwise canteens at convenient points. The policy from the outset has been that distribution must be conducted by each country to all in need regardless of race, religion or political faith. It has been possible to extend the relief from the cities into districts and hamlets removed from the railroads, many of them being reached by animal or aerial tramway transportation. It is important to point out that the internal organization is being so conducted as to stimulate the people themselves to accept and maintain the responsibility of operation.

Present and Future Support

The need for clothing also became so acute that it was necessary to attempt to meet this situation as well. In addition to saving many of these children from suffering and possible death it will also prevent the threatened breaking down of the daily meal in that the children would be unable to leave their homes to go to and from the kitchens. The clothing relief is worked out in much the same way as the food and invoices the purchase rather than the collection of the material, as it is far more economical and wise under present conditions in Europe.

Because further activities on the part of the United States Government ceased on June 30th, last, and because of the conviction on the part of the European Government that this work among the children must not be retarded, Mr. Hoover, together with his associates, determined to continue the essential parts of this organization as the American Relief Administration European Children's Fund of which Mr. Hoover is Chairman. As a private charity it will exercise a supervisory control in Europe apart from obtaining and transferring the supplies made available to their proper destination.

The European Governments have made every effort to support this relief, both in funds and service and we hope will be able to contribute further sums. The entire expense of operation inside the borders of each country has been and will be borne by the local governments, thus enabling funds supplied from other sources to be devoted entirely for food and clothing. The financial burden of this relief, however, cannot be left wholly to these European countries, depleted and almost bankrupt in resources. It is our conviction that substantial supplemental assistance should be supplied by relief organizations or other societies such as of those in America of European descent or those who have reason to be particularly interested. Such groups are now helping through money contributions. We hope with their efforts and the voluntary assistance of others, that this intensely pressing human problem will be met.

Feb. 14th—Springlike in the start, but 'tis different at night, and—

Feb. 15—"Oh, what a difference in the morning."
She's hit zero; the cold winds blow,
And the gas has gone where the ground hogs dwell;
So I've said "me too"—For the hay I flew,
And I don't care a shiver for the "H. C. L."

Hilltop fire department makes a run to 73 West Park avenue, where some one was thrawing out a pipe and something got too hot, I suppose. Then they made another to Dakota avenue, when an overheated furnace (no, not a gas furnace) was doing some stunts.

Feb. 16.—One of winter's coldest mornings. Gas out completely in many homes. Hilltop fire department called to small fire on South Harris avenue.

Feb. 17th.—Lots warmer. Gas sneaking back with a "guilty conscience."

February 21—Fire department called to 2930 West Broad on account of gas leak in cellar.

Mr. Thomas Jenkins of Nelsonville and Miss Myrtle M. Whipple, were married at the home of her parents, 473 S. Ogden Ave., Saturday, February 21st, the Rev. E. B. White officiating. The newly married couple will reside on E. Long street.

Vigilance Committees.

The first vigilance committee of prominence was organized in San Francisco in June, 1851, when the crimes of desperadoes who had immigrated to the gold fields were rapidly increasing in numbers. Similar committees were common in other parts of California and in the mining districts of Idaho and Montana. Committees or societies of somewhat the same nature were formed in the Southern states during the reconstruction period, from 1865 to 1872, to protect white families from negroes and "carpetbaggers," and besides these there were the Ku-Klux Klan and its branches, the Knights of the White Camelia, the Pale Faces and the Invisible Empire of the South, the principal object of which was to control the negroes by striking them with terror.

Prize for New York Museum.

A specimen of the giant panda, believed to be the only one ever brought to this country, has been placed on exhibition in the New York Museum of Natural History. The skin was obtained from a missionary in western China and mounted by Frederick Blaschke. The animal, although resembling somewhat a black bear, is really a distant relative of the raccoon. It has a striking black and white pelt and a short muzzle. Almost nothing is known of its habits.

CUSSINS & HARTSOUGH

Broad and Oakley Hill op 550

Hopewell got acquainted, and encouraged by his progress of the first day David summoned enough courage to invite Susie to attend the theater with him.

Susie seemed to welcome his attentions, and soon he was calling on her with considerable regularity. Three months after the purchase of the sewing machine that had served to guide their destinies, they became engaged.

"Isn't it wonderful," he observed one night, "what little things serve to bring a man and woman together?"

"Yes," she agreed, "I once heard of a man who met his fate just because a strong wind blew a hat from a young lady's head, and he ran after it for her."

"That case is no stranger than ours," said David, "Just a little sewing machine did the business. Do you know that I fell in love with you the day you came into my store to buy the machine? And do you know that I deliberately damaged a sewing machine so that I might get acquainted with you?"

"You damaged my machine?" she inquired, evidently perplexed.

"Well, no, I didn't. I damaged another one by mistake—fixed the bobbin so it wouldn't work. As it happened, my strategy proved unnecessary thanks to the accidental breaking of the belt on your machine."

Susie smiled. There was a queer, rather mischievous twinkle in her eyes.

"Yes, it was strange," she admitted. "I suppose you figured all was fair in love. Well, now I'll make a confession of my own. I fell in love with you the day I stepped into your store."

"I never suspected it," he exclaimed.

"I didn't intend that you should," she said. "But my heart was bumping so hard when you advanced to wait on me that I feared you would hear it.

"I also believed that all was fair in love," she went on after a brief pause. "In fact, I deliberately broke that belt—so I could have you fix it."

QUEER METHODS OF FISHING

In Palestine They Do Not Use Nets and Would Laugh at a Hook and Line.

The modern Palestine dweller tells us that he would now look in vain for boats "launching out into the deep," and working nets all night in the Sea of Galilee. Not that the fish have disappeared; they are to be caught there in millions, as also in the Jordan and Jabbock; but the Arabs, less accustomed to systematic work than the Jews of old, follow easier plans—the simplest of which is throwing poisoned bits of meal cake into the water, and then wading in to make a collection, a custom of which no other human is like to rob them.

Another way of doing the work is by pelting the fish with stones, which can be done very profitably when the schools of yellow mesht congregate. Some of the Bedouins, probably taking example by travelers, fire charges of small shot among them, and so get a bag; so thick are these schools that it is even said that a revolver bullet has been known to kill three fish.

Hook and line may be found very occasionally, but, as a rule, when the practices above are not resorted to, the fishing is done by small dip nets or large hand nets; in the former case the fishermen, standing on the banks, lower a kind of bird net which can be closed by the pulling of a rope, from racks or wooden platforms, and hauled up at intervals of an hour or so. Where the hand net is in use—it is a kind of cross between a butterfly and shrimp net—the fisherman wades in up to his waist with a bag on his shoulder, and is content to catch the fish one or two at a time. The fish of the Syrian waters are of many different species, but few are peculiar to the country.—Exchange.

The Hilltop Child Relief Fund

The Hilltop Child Relief Fund for the starving European children increased in larger proportion last week than it did the previous week. The amount received during this week was $35.25 making a total of $137.40. This will take care of 27 children. We have about three weeks to go yet until April first. This list should reach at least $250.00 by that time. And it can easily be done if those who have yet not contributed will just send in 50 cents or a dollar which surely will not be missed, especially when it goes for such a worthy cause.

Dear reader do you think what the awful agonies of death from starvation can be? "But whose hath this world's good and seeth his brother have need and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him how dulleth the love of God in him?"—I John 3:17.

Several years ago he united with the St. Paul United Evangelical church and was faithful until death. He leaves to mourn, a wife, six children, two brothers and two sisters, three grandchildren and many other relatives and friends.

His funeral was held from the St. Paul United Evangelical church on Tuesday afternoon at 2 p. m.

OBITUARY

Mary Jane Herbert was born in Brown township, Franklin county, O., July 30, 1858, and died in Columbus, Ohio, March 6, 1920 age 61 years, 7 months and 6 days.

Mary Jane Herbert, the deceased, was the daughter of Robert and Anne Bynner who died many years ago. She was one of a family of seven children. Two brothers, Robert of Brown township and Charles of Columbus, three sisters Mrs. Emma Brownfield of California, Mrs. Anna Ingalls of Prairie township and Mrs. Hattie Jones of Columbus survive to recall the pleasant memories of brotherhood and sisterhood during the happy days of childhood in the Bynner home.

Mary Jane Bynner, the deceased, was married to Lincoln Bidwell of Madison county in 1879, and to this union, R. B. Bidwell of Columbus and Mrs. Grace Windle of Brown township were born. Lincoln Bidwell, the father and first husband, died July 16, 1885. Three years later, Sept. 30, 1888, Mary Jane Bidwell was united in marriage with Edward Herbert of Brown township, this county. One child, Mrs. Madge H. Slyh was born to this union, she being the only child of the surviving husband and father. The husband, three children, four grandchildren, two brothers and three sisters and a host of friends mourn the loss and share the sorrow that death has caused.

Mary Jane Herbert was a devout Christian. She was converted and baptized when only a child. This was during the early days of Welsh and Baptist community services in Brown township. She united with the Colwell M. E. church upon its organization and attended regularly until the family transferred membership to the Glenwood M. E. church in 1912 of which church she has been a loyal member.

Mrs. Herbert was a patient, courageous, hopeful sufferer. For seven years she had endured her affliction with very little complaint always trusting that the future might restore her to her normal condition. Her neighbors bring testimony to her sincerity of heart and consistent life. She made wifehood and motherhood her supreme task and gave her supreme efforts to their end.

The Glenwood Home Mission Society will meet Thursday, March 18, at 2 o'clock, at the home of Mrs. B. J. Dildine, 31 N. Warren.

The Hilltop W. C. T. U. will meet with Mrs. Geo. Hill, 2413 West Broad street, Friday at 2 o'clock. There will be reception of new members.

Little 5-year-old Jean Marshall was visiting at the home of her grandparents where the pet canary she loved so much had died. After inquiring particulars as to why and when and how it died she said quite soberly, "Why don't you ask the Lord to make you another bird—he would —wouldn't he?"

The same little "tot" went to the evangelistic service at Glenwood. After the service some one remarked in her hearing, "That was a fine sermon." She waited until others had commented, then said with a mischievous twinkle in her eye "It was too loud, for little ears."

The largest crowd that ever assembled at the Glenwood Shelter House to witness any athletic contest saw Holy Family (West church champions) defeat an all-star team composed of the other West church teams Tuesday by the score of 26-22. The score was a tie at 11 all at the end of the first half. Both teams played great ball and the result was in doubt until the final whistle sounded. The girls also put on a thriller and the score for their game was 7-6 in favor of the Western Six over the Glenwood Buckeyes.

The Glenwood volley ball team had things their own way defeating the North Congregational team the best two out of three by the scores of 21-4 and 21-18. The burlesque game also made quite a hit with the crowd, the boys did not overlook a thing when it came to classy costumes.

There will be an indoor baseball meeting at the Glenwood Shelter House Thursday evening, March 11, at 7:30. All teams expecting to enter a team in the league must have a representative present at this meeting as this is the final meeting before the season starts, March the 18. Any West Side team is eligible to join this league.

Music Lovers

A chance for real enjoyment is coming. The final number of the Glenwood Lyceum Course will be held on Friday, March 19.

In order to allow everyone who so desires, an opportunity to see the entertainment, the admission fee has been reduced to twenty-five cents. Additional accommodations for 200 people will be provided in order to assure everyone admittance.

The Ladies' Spanish Orchestra is one of the most popular musical organizations upon the platform today. Six ladies compose the orchestra, each especially fitted for her particular part of the program. The company is a singing orchestra and the members are equally entertaining in this respect.

The time: Friday, March 19, 8 P. M.
The Place: Glenwood M. E. church, Highland avenue.
The Price: Twenty-five cents.

The W. H. and F. M. S. of St. Paul at the parsonage. China is the subject to be studied and will be presented by different members. The self-denial offering will be received at this time. Come and get an interest in saving the world.

The Home Guards will meet at the home of Harriett Lowrie, 275 Elden avenue, Friday, March 12, at 3:00.

We know of a needy family consisting of father, mother and eight children, where the parents have both been sick with "flu"—the father not having worked since January. Anyone having cast off clothing, or especially shoes, for a boy of 2 and 7 or girl of 4, 10 and 11 years please send word to Record office.

Miss Mable Taylor of 78 Clarendon avenue entertained with a birthday dinner Sunday. Covers were laid for the Misses Margaret, Marie and Nelle Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Tong, Mr. H. F. Taylor and her grandmother, Mrs. Taylor.

The marriage of Miss Beulah Burries Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Taylor, Chillicothe, Ohio, to Mr. Russell M. Raub, son of Mrs. Arthur Grooms of Columbus, was solemnized Sunday morning, February 15th at St. John's Lutheran church by Rev. G. W. Lose. The first ceremony solemnized at that church. The only attendants were Mr. and Mrs. Arles L. Mauck.

Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Bright's grandson Laddy Bright, is at the hospital, having had his tonsils removed.

Mrs. George Stewart underwent an operation at Mt. Carmel hospital on Wednesday. She is reported as getting along very well at this writing.

The Straphanger

Were I the guy that put Poe in poet, I'd write an ode to the Friendly Strap.

How many times has its friendly ministrations saved us from a most embarrassing position?

O you March! March along.

Hurrah! Two champion basket ball teams on the West Side. West Hi lost only one game in twelve. Seiller's Huskies won first honors in Capital City League. That's the kind of a record that is coveted by all progressive communities and one of which the Hilltop is especially proud. Congratulations to the members and officials of these teams.

Can you bring enough love to your job to make at once a high duty you owe to your fellow man and an important detail in the great plan of things? If not you ought to get right.

Mr. Straphanger or Mr. Seatwarmer, if you expect to rate well in your community do not expectorate in the window slot behind you. Some child may receive the evil effects of your folly.

The Straphanger predicts the opening of Broad street bridge by July 1st. See how far we miss it.

STRAP HANGER

We desire to express to our many friends our appreciation for all the kindness shown us during our recent bereavement; for the assistance during the long period of illness; for the words of consolation and sympathy; for the beautiful floral contributions; and for all other means that have helped to soothe our sorrow; to all our friends we are truly grateful. To Rev. Wykoff who spoke words of condolence and comfort, words which touched our heart but which gave us promise, we express our thanks.

For the cheerful organ music and the very appropriate solos we are thankful.

To Mr. and Mrs. Kahn for the efficient manner in which the funeral was conducted we too express our appreciation.

We feel these are the sentiments of our dear wife and beloved mother.

EDWARD HERBERT AND CHILDREN.

courage, with fingers that were bloodless where they gripped the book in her lap, listened without a word or sign. Pelly was respectful, unimaginative, a bit stolid as always. He talked along in a monotone, as if he had rehearsed the tale over and over, on his way, to make easier the breaking of the news.

"At the last," he said, "though we'd been expecting it for hours, the end came sudden like. She broached to and twisted herself all out of shape like a rotten stick; you could feel the slump under you when those old rivets began to go. It was just like the tearing of a worn-out rag. She ripped wide open and the whole Atlantic ocean came in. Of course it was a case of piling into the boats and getting away from her—if we could. There were nineteen people in our company, and four boats—more than enough. Six of us got into one of them and got it into the water, right side up by good luck. Something happened to the other boat on that side of the ship, for it came down tail first, as near as we could see, and dumped the crew into the sea.

"The lights were burning—they burned to the last, for the electrical plant was on the main deck—and I could make out Frank's white sweater, the only one on the ship. He was in that boat. When the boat came down by the run we put about and headed for the spot. The sea was running in enormous great swells, with very little chop.

"Those men shot out from under the lee of the ship like chips, and we contrived to get them all except Frank. He was swimming and managed to get as close to us as I am to you. I reached out both hands to grab him—and he threw up his arms and went down."

That was the story. It made in Constance Brand's lonely life the dif-

HOW PELLY PAID

By WILL T. AMES

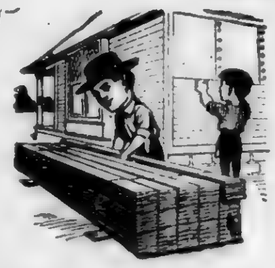
Because some thousands of ships that should have been carrying the products of one people to the markets of another were rotting on the floor of the sea, sent there by the Germans, and because in consequence freight rates were so high that it paid better to take mad chances with the lives of sailors than to lay vessels up for repairs, the Twin Sisters dragged a jangle of loose plates through a West Indian tornado for fourteen hours, and then, after screaming for aid till her wireless broke down, jammed her nose under and went to the bottom in the midst of howling darkness.

Five days thereafter Fenton Pelly, dressed in the completely new clothes that had replaced the outfit he lost in the Twin Sisters, called at the home of Constance Brand, bringing her the story of sunny Frank Sudbury's tragic end.



They had known each other long, these three—ever since Constance was a pupil in the grammar school where she taught, and the boys, older by a year or two, played the part of rivals for her favor. Later, in their grown-up time, Pelly had taken it rather badly when Constance, spurred by his persistence, had told him flatly that her choice of Frank Sudbury was deliberate, irrevocable and quite beyond his undoing.

Fenton sneered a little at her choice, for already he was a seagoing man with an engineer's papers, while Frank had not yet found himself. Then came the war, and Frank, serving in the navy, by the time it was over had discovered that his lines of life lay on blue water too.

That's how he came to be second officer of the freighter Twin Sisters that night when she went down in the tropic storm, and how Pelly came to be the bearer of the tidings, for fate had shanghaied them into the same ship.

Constance, white faced, dry eyed, clinging to her woman's pride and

A MAN FOR MISS PELHAM

By JANE OSBORN

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"By the way, I've decided to get a man." Sarah Pelham did not speak as if she had made any more remarkable announcement than that she goes out to lunch, or any of the other things of daily occurrence in her office life in the advertising firm of Stone & Stone.

But William Stone drew up in his office chair and removed his shell-rimmed spectacles and looked at her closely. She was at the threshold of his office, about to return to her own.

"I said I was going to get a man," said Sarah again with finality. "You told me to select my assistant without consulting you—that I should rely entirely upon my own judgment. And that is what I have decided. Now, I am going to advertise for some quick-witted young man who wants to learn the advertising business. Nowadays one has to pay women as much as men, and for what I have to offer I think I could get something better in the way of an ambitious young man than I could if I took on a woman."

And though William Stone wrinkled his brows in perplexity and disapproval and was inclined to argue about it, Sarah smiled serenely out of his sight to her own office.

And Sarah Pelham did get her man—a clean-cut, clear-eyed young man whose broad chest and shoulders and robustness would have led you to surmise—as was actually the case—that he had recently returned from service in France. And it was because he had just returned that he was willing to start in as Miss Pelham's assistant. He had been content to keep books in his father's unprogressive hardware store before he had gone overseas, but he had come back with a keen desire to get into the advertising business, and with the desire a willingness to begin at the bottom rung.

His name was Leslie Brown. From the first Sarah Pelham found him entirely to her liking. William Stone watched him narrowly as he sat at his desk that was placed in the outer office, conveniently near to the door that led into Miss Pelham's room.

"I Said I Was Going to Get a Man."

One day he noticed that Sarah and "that young Brown," as he rather contemptuously called him, left the office together about lunch time. This was intensely annoying, so much so, in fact, that when he went to his own lunch he absentmindedly ordered a dish he never ate and left it untasted.

He made up his mind that he would not speak of the incident that annoyed him to Sarah Pelham. He never had interfered in the least with her goings and comings—in fact he had never in the five years that she had worked for him been the least interested in her except as a useful member of the staff.

But, despite his resolution, he found himself gravitating into her room as soon as she had returned from lunch—which was some half-hour after he had returned.

"What's the idea?" he asked with a nod toward the outer office in the region where Leslie Brown's desk was placed. "Going to take lunch with that young Brown regularly?" he inquired. Now, Sarah had not had lunch with Leslie Brown. They had gone out together because Sarah had wanted to take him to see a certain rather difficult client to whom she wanted to give Leslie a personal introduction before he was detailed to look after his interests for her.

She had left Leslie making a splendid impression on this merchant while she slipped away to her lunch club. But she didn't explain this to William Stone. In fact, she hedged his question.

William Stone had been known in times past to take attractive young artists to whom he gave orders out to lunch with him. But Sarah did not remind him of this.

"What's the idea of having him, anyway?" went on Mr. Stone. "I was thinking it over and I have never known a single woman in all my business experience who has had a man assistant. It's a funny notion, and I can't say that I am exactly stuck on it. What's the idea, anyway?"

"Well, for one thing," explained Sarah, "it saves a lot of time. If I had a girl and we became all friendly, I'd have to listen to her while she explained that she hadn't got in until half-past nine, because her mother had forgotten to wind the alarm clock, and then the maid didn't come to get breakfast and so on. Then I'd have to talk over her new clothes. She'd have her new hats sent here, and I'd have to give her my candid advice about them. Besides, I like a man's point of view. It puts punch in my copy. It's the combination of the masculine and the feminine—my intuition and judgment and his stronger grip."

William Stone did not find this explanation at all to his liking. "But it seems like disloyalty to your sex," he argued, "to say that you would rather work with a man than a woman—and you have always pretended to be such a feminist."

"Is it disloyalty to your sex to say that you wouldn't consider having a boy stenographer—that girls are more trustworthy, more reliable and pleasanter to have around? I believe you have made that explanation."

"That's quite different," almost snapped William Stone. "Besides, I don't see why you should object to my having girl stenographers."

Sarah laughed, yet she felt in Mr. Stone's entire attitude toward her something that was vastly flattering to her. After having worked for Stone & Stone tirelessly for five years and never having been looked upon as anything more than a useful bit of machinery, it was gratifying to the woman in her to find this absurd spirit crop out in William Stone which she could not interpret as anything short of jealousy.

And so the weeks rolled on. Meantime Leslie Brown made progress, and perhaps at first, out of sheer desire to tease William Stone, Sarah asked her assistant to have lunch with her—they could save time on a busy day, she said, if they talked things over at lunch. Then one day William Stone approached Leslie, whom he had scarcely spoken to before, with the result that that day Leslie had lunch at William Stone's club. They were gone two hours, and they had said much in that time. When they parted at the door of the office of Stone & Stone, William slapped the younger man on the back.

After that Stone wore a smile that was in strong contrast to the look of gloom that had been his for the days previous.

The next day he asked Sarah Pelham to stay after 5 and talk to him. He had made this request before when there was pressing business. And as Sarah lived near the office and had no home ties, she was not inconvenienced.

But the business interview did not begin like the other business interviews. "It's a queer place to say what I'm going to say," he began, standing in front of the window in Sarah's office and looking intently at her. "But it is something I can't keep to myself any longer. Sarah Pelham, I want to marry you. I love you—and it's the kind of love that wants to keep you all to myself. It's torture having you here in an office, going about to other offices. Sarah Pelham, you do love me a little, don't you?"

Sarah Pelham had perhaps divined that William Stone loved her, but she was completely taken by surprise by this spirit of self-confidence.

"Yes, I think I do," she confessed, "but how did you—how did you know? I didn't want you to guess it so easily. That's why I tried to make you think I didn't."

"You succeeded perfectly," assured William. "Fact is, I thought there was something between you and young Brown—that's what made me so jealous from the first. It was torture. I couldn't bring myself to ask you, so I took him to lunch and got my nerve up to ask him. And the young scamp's been engaged all the time. Fine fellow. I said more than I intended to—he seemed to guess how I felt about you. And I was thinking, Sarah Pelham, that it's been a good idea breaking in a man like that because now you and I can marry without doing much harm to Stone & Stone. Young Brown can work right into your job."

The subject of diet and its relation to longevity is one of perennial interest, and there is no surer road to fame, or at least to notoriety, than that of promulgating rules of diet and living. Everybody would like to pass the century mark and as many of them as possible, providing his physical vigor and functions could remain unimpaired or nearly so, and even Methuselah's 969 years would scarcely suffice for a man who would like to taste all experiences, acquire all knowledge, and accomplish all his hopes, dreams and desires. Even then he might be reluctant to shuffle off this mortal coil and enter upon new experiences in the beyond.

Says Napoleon Detested Tobacco.

In a letter from Mlle. Bertrand, daughter of General Bertrand, Napoleon's devoted companion at St. Helena, Mlle. Bertrand maintained that, although the emperor was commonly credited with being a snuff-taker, he detested tobacco in any form. "Only once," she wrote, "was Napoleon persuaded to try a pipe. As soon as he placed the amber tube in his mouth he flung it from him with a gesture of disgust and shouted: 'Take the disgusting thing away.'

"To soothe his chronic indigestion the emperor had a mixture of licorice and brown sugar made up, which he carried loose in his waistcoat pockets. He frequently had recourse to this, and when in company would convey a pinch to his nostrils as if it were snuff, but instead of inhaling it he would slide it surreptitiously into his mouth."—Detroit News.

KE-O-KA
Nerve and Blood Remedy

KE-O-KA AIDS THE CIRCULATION

Three persons within six squares of our home, by the use of KE-O-KA have been strengthened so as to use their limbs, which before its use was impossible. KE-O-KA aids the circulation, thus adding to the life forces.

Read what Mrs. V. C. Banner of 176 S. Burgess Ave. says:

"I began the use of KE-O-KA about four months ago. Bronchial pneumonia had rendered me helpless. I could not straighten limbs neither could I stand or walk, but now I can straighten the limbs out and can rest in comfort. I can stand on my feet and walk, which I could not do for about one year before I began the use of KE-O-KA".

We are prepared to deliver quickly at your home or by parcel post six bottles of KE-O-KA, price $5.24. Three bottles, which if used as directed, will last about two months, $2.62.

Address E. M. Leach, 98 N. Harris Avenue, or call Hilltop 2866. Remember KE-O-KA contains eight of the best vegetable remedies known, has the best medical skill, absolutely harmless, contains no opiates. Order today.

How Pelly Paid

ference between noon and midnight, between a dream day in May and a stark midwinter blizzard.

Her parents were dead; serious, purposeful, she had made few light friendships; outside her work Frank Sudbury had filled her existence for years. She found herself now living in a spiritual vacuum. A vast, resentful unrest filled her. She became afraid of her own rebellious thoughts.

In this mood Fenton Pelly supplied, in some unaccountable way, a link with her dead happiness. She had not liked the man too well, but he had been there in the last terrible scene—and he had tried to save her lover.

As the weeks passed she admitted him to some share in her life, as he had been a sharer in its tragedy. And Pelly, with a tactfulness and delicacy beyond what she had deemed him capable of, found ways of making himself well-nigh indispensable. He was with her a great deal.

He had decided to stay ashore, he said. He had saved some money and was looking into the garage business.

At last Pelly poured out his heart again. Constance, softened toward the man and thinking of herself as one whose wrecked life could thereafter yield some shreds of content only in giving happiness to others, did not definitely deny him. It was too soon, she said, for such thoughts. As for the future—who could tell?

At the end of four months, because he had been cautious and discreet and very kind, and devoted himself to her wholly, there came an evening when the time seemed ripe to Pelly to clinch his chain. They stood at the gate of Constance's boarding place. Pelly, with a workman's deference and an obvious struggle to muster the needed courage, placed his hand over the slender one that lay upon the pickets.

"Constance," he said, "if you can't live in sunshine, why not at least take shelter from the storm?"

Why not, indeed? Why keep on with this life of racking torment, all so hopelessly useless, when there lay at hand peace, security, usefulness, perhaps content?

The girl, hesitating for an answer, gazed far off down the quiet summer street where the whispering maples cast flickering shadows across the form of the only wayfarer in sight, a man just passing hurriedly under the corner arc lamp. Suddenly Constance's form stiffened.

A strange, wild, eager light sprang into her eyes. "Frank!" she cried, and instantly was gone running like a child down the street and into the very arms of the oncomer.

When, in their mutual joy and in the girl's tumultuous resurrection of happiness, they reached the gate Fenton Pelly was not there. Constance never saw him again. It was very strange, she told Frank over and over again, that their good friend should have so unaccountably disappeared.

And though Frank told in circumstance the miraculous story of his rescue from a huddle of ship's joiner work that he had grasped in the nick of time—how he had been picked up by a fore-and-after bound from New Orleans to Good Hope, and started back within the hour, and with no chance to cable, on a tramp that carried no wireless and had reached port only three hours before—there was one thing she did not tell Constance till after they were married.

Pelly's story was true, save in one detail. "I was the last man to try to get into Pelly's boat," said Frank, "and I could have made it, for I had gripped the gunwale with both hands and was not exhausted. But he beat my hands with the butt of a pistol that he always carried at sea, and I had to let go. I knew why, of course; it was because he wanted you. And the reason I didn't wire from New York today was because I didn't want him to get away; I wanted to put him over the jumps for what he did. But when I got home and you met me the way you did—why, Pelly might have stayed right here for all of me. He's punished worse, far worse, than the law could ever punish him—having you know."

Valley of Wonders.

A veritable natural masterpiece is the "Closed Cathedral," of Red Rock canyon, in southern California, a study in magnificent coloring, so gorgeous and yet so softly harmonious that no mortal artist's brush could hope to equal it. The edifice is of tremendous size, with an entrance 26 feet high and 15 feet wide, solidly blocked at a depth of 12 feet. Pure white, deep blue, red, yellow, green, and all the intervening shades are blended in the decorative scheme. One of the results is the suggestion of an immense stained-glass window. The whole aspect is of vast antiquity, enhanced by a crack or fault extending diagonally across the front, and through the general formation—evidence of an earth slide before or possibly soon after the processes of erosion began. So realistic is the cathedral effect that one involuntarily listens for bells calling the pious to prayers.—John L. Von Blon in the Wide World Magazine.

One touring car with piston rings;
Two rear wheels, one front spring,
Has no fenders, seat or plank,
Burns lots of gas, hard to crank,
Carburetor busted half way through,
Engine missing hits on two.
Three years old—four in the Spring,
Has shock absorbers and everything.
Radiator busted, sure does leak,
Differentials dry, you can hear it squeak;
Ten spokes missing, front all bent,
Tires blowed out, ain't worth a cent;
Got lots of speed will run like the deuce;
Burns either gas or tobacco juice;
Tires all off, been run on the rim,
A mighty good car for the shape its in

When your day's work is done and home you go,
And supper is cold, 'cause the gas is low;
Atmosphere is blue and wife's nose pink.

LATENT POWER IN THE ATOM

Enormous Force That No Doubt Will Some Day Become Available to Mankind's Use.

Only a few years ago it was the teaching that the atom was the smallest division of matter, and today scientists are discussing the possibility of the race learning how to use the force which would become available with the unlocking of the latent atomic power.

Prof. W. A. Noyes discussed the relations between atoms and electrons, which form a part of atoms, in his address upon being awarded the Willard Gibbs medal, and stated that electrons probably rotate. This would make the atom a sort of miniature universe in which its nucleus would correspond to a sun and the electrons to the revolving planets.

Sir Oliver Lodge, in a recent address, also spoke of the latent atomic power which he considers so very great that it would be disastrous to have it become available to men before a moral plane high enough to prevent its abuse has been reached. He thought that a way to release this great power is not beyond the possible and some day it may supply a satisfactory substitute for that now obtained when molecules, made up of atoms, are shattered by combustion of fuel or other chemical processes.—Scientific American.

The Straphanger

The strap-hanger has a faith to believe that there is nothing given a man in a material way but that if used properly may prove a blessing. The trouble is, we oft-times mistake abuse for use. The automobile, for instance, is undoubtedly a boon to mankind but it is being greatly abused today.

What gives more genuine satisfaction than an honest task honorably done.

"And man is never half so blest
As when the busy day is spent
So as to make his evening's rest,
A holiday, of glad content."

A fine example of courage and devotion is seen in the erection of the new church, corner of Terrace and Broad. Such faith and courage wins over all obstacles.

The Elite Club met at the home of Mrs. George Rhyan, North Ogden Ave. last Thursday afternoon. Refreshments were served and a good time was had by all. Following members were present: Mrs. Elmer Houdasheit, Mrs. Oscar Jenkins, Mrs. Melvin Breta, Mrs. Williams, Mrs. H. Spangler.

The Third Anniversary of St. John's Lutheran Church, Burgess Ave., was celebrated last Sunday evening. The chapel was crowded and the services quite inspiring.

The Strenuous Life.

This phrase originated with the late Theodore Roosevelt. In a speech at the Hamilton club, Chicago, in 1899, he said: "I wish to preach not the doctrine of ignoble ease, but the doctrine of the strenuous life; the life of toil and effort, of labor and strife; to preach that higher form of success which comes, not to the man who desires merely easy peace, but to the man who does not shrink from danger, from hardships or from bitter toil, and who out of these wins splendid ultimate triumph."

The ladies of the Third Division of the Aid of Glenwood M. E. church met at the home of Mrs. Acker, 100 Highland Ave., with 9 members present and Dr. and Mrs. Wykoff as visitors. Every one enjoyed a very pleasant day quilting and the business meeting in the afternoon. One of the important parts of the day was the fine dinner served by the hostess as we all know is so capable of doing.

The Women's Society of Hill Crest will hold their next meeting at the church Thursday, March 25, at 1:30 p. m. There will be a special missionary program, with special music. All mite boxes will be returned on or before this date. If you can not attend this meeting please bring the mite box next Sunday. It is very important that all boxes be returned. Silver offering will be taken.

A DEAL IN REAL ESTATE

By WILLIAM A. STIMPSON

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

John Powers threw back his shoulders and breathed in deep draughts of the country air while his eyes swept the panorama of field and wood before him.

Half way down the hill lay a small farm, the house gleaming white against the green foliage. It stood well back from the road and was shaded by two huge sugar maples. The smooth lawn in front, with its shrubbery and flowers, the well-kept fences and trim outbuildings, testified to the thrift and good taste of the occupants.

"Now, if I only had a wife, that would be just the place for me," Powers said to himself, stopping to gaze longingly at the cottage.

It was after five o'clock and the young attorney had left the office in town with its heat and dust and its clacking typewriters an hour before for his daily tramp.

He swung down the hill, his eyes taking in every detail of the property before him, and of course he could not miss seeing the board sign lettered, "For Sale." He came to a halt again and stared greedily.

"Oh, well, it's nothing to me," he mused, starting forward again. "The price must be far beyond my means even if I had any use for a farm." Resolutely he directed his eyes in another direction.

But he had walked only a few yards further when he realized he was studying the trim little cottage again. His steps lagged. "There would be no harm in asking the price, I suppose," he said to himself slowly, stopping again. "No, no harm in that, surely," he reasoned, and a moment later he had turned in at the graveled driveway.

As he ascended the front steps he was conscious of voices just inside the closed door. "The property'll never bring your figure. Better accept my offer, you'll not get as good again—"

Silence followed the interrupting knock, then the door was opened. Powers bared his head courteously. "Will you tell me the price—" he began, then paused in confusion as he met the eyes of the girl before him. "Why

"No, You Don't, Young Fellow."

—why, Helen Rand! I didn't know you lived here," he stammered, recognizing a friend of his youth grown to young womanhood.

"John Powers! Of all people!" the girl exclaimed, offering her hand. "Come right in."

"I fear I'm intruding," Powers answered, recovering from his surprise.

"No, indeed, you are not," the girl assured him. "Mother is here and a business caller, Mr. Jackson."

Powers nodded coolly to Jackson, whom he recognized as a shrewd real estate speculator. The man was plainly put out at the interruption.

"How long have you lived here?" Powers inquired.

"About a year," the girl replied. "It's strange I haven't run across you in town."

"Father was ill when we came and died three months ago. I didn't go out much."

"I see," said Powers gravely. "But I may as well obtain the information I came for," he added. "What do you ask for this place?"

"Five thousand dollars," came the answer.

Powers' face fell.

"Don't you want to look through?" the girl asked eagerly. "I believe that is the proper way to talk to a prospective purchaser," she laughed, rising and leading the way into the dining room.

Powers was quick to follow. "Certainly I'll look through. Can't tell whether I'll want the place or not until I've seen it," he returned lightly.

"That man is trying to buy the property at a ridiculously low price and I'm afraid mother'll accept the offer. I thought maybe if you showed an interest in it he might give more," the girl whispered in the privacy of the kitchen.

"I'm on," Powers whispered back, his lips close to one dainty ear.

"Now there are three sleeping rooms and a bath upstairs. I'll show you those," his guide announced as they returned to the living room.

"The house is a perfect gem." Powers' enthusiastic praise was meant for the ears of Jackson, with whom Mrs. Rand was politely keeping up a conversation.

"Why sell this pretty place?" Powers asked when the two were alone again.

Helen's merry air vanished. "Financial reasons; father left very little."

"Well, what about my offer, Miss Rand?" The impatient voice of the real estate man broke in sharply upon them.

The girl glanced questioningly at Powers. "I—I hardly think so—not tonight, at any rate. The offer is too low," she called, descending the stairs.

"It's every cent I can give," the speculator snapped, "and my offer won't stand long." He paused for a moment. "Don't think every one who looks at the house is going to buy it," he sneered, shooting a black look at Powers. "Just sign that contract," he urged, turning to the older woman, "and I'll pay a deposit now and the balance of the money as soon as the title can be searched and the deed drawn."

"What is the offer, Helen?" Powers' voice had an ominous ring to it.

"Thirty-five hundred dollars," the girl answered quickly.

"Too low by fifteen hundred," Powers returned sharply. He paused, then, "I will buy the property at your figure, Mrs. Rand," he declared with a quick glance at Jackson.

There was a little scream of delight from the girl and Jackson turned a threatening look upon the young man. "And who may you be, butting in on my business?" he demanded harshly.

Powers ignored him. "I'll write you a check for five hundred dollars as a deposit," he said coolly, addressing the mother and leading the slightly bewildered woman to a table.

The speculator darted forward. "No, you don't, young fellow. This is my dent. The ladies accepted my offer," he shouted.

Powers turned. "The matter has passed out of your control, Mr. Jackson. The ladies did not accept your offer," he said.

Jackson faced Mrs. Rand. "You can't sell the property to this man," he whined. "Who is he? How do you know he has the money—"

"That will do, Mr. Jackson," the widow interrupted sharply. "We have known Mr. Powers for a long time. He is an honorable gentleman, a friend of my daughter, and you cannot insult him further in my house. Good afternoon, sir."

Mrs. Rand turned her back on Jackson and the two women and Powers drew up together at the table. The real estate man slammed his hat on his head and strode angrily from the house.

"Now the next thing is, when will you want possession, John?" Miss Rand asked when the check had been ——— ever and a brief memorandum

Cambrian rocks of the Canadian Rocky mountains.

This is the first authentic proof that this form of plant life existed in that far-distant past, although many primitive forerunners of animal life have been brought to light in the form of fossils. The presence of these fossil algae was known to Doctor Walcott for several years, but he delayed studying them until all possible material was available.

The fossils were found by Doctor Walcott in the Middle Cambrian rocks of Burgess pass, British Columbia, where they were quarried out. Some of them were later cut into thin sections for study and comparison with modern algae.

Of course, in the remote time when these plants were deposited on the muddy sea bottom, the rock formations that are now thousands of feet above sea level in the Rocky mountains formed the shore line of or agreement of sale had been signed.

"Why—er—I hadn't thought of that," he replied soberly.

The girl laughed merrily at the perplexed look on his face, at which Powers brightened. "Well, I guess you people can stay for a while, anyhow," he flashed, joining in the merriment.

Helen's face glowed with eagerness. "Do you mean you will rent the property to us and we won't have to move right away?" she exclaimed.

"Well, I can't run even this little farm alone. I'm still a bachelor, you know," he replied brusquely.

"Oh!" Her eyes fell before his steady gaze.

"Unless," he went on, his voice thrilling and his lips brushing her cheek, "you are willing that we run the place together as Mr. and Mrs. Powers? What do you say?"

"O, John, do you really want to do that?" she murmured.

He drew her to him. "More than anything else in the world, sweetheart, now that I've found you again," came the whispered answer.

SEA PLANTS IN THE ROCKIES

Proof That Country, Millions of Years Ago, Was Muddy Bottom of an Ocean.

That many of the algae or seaweeds of the Middle Cambrian epoch of geologic time, some twenty-five or thirty millions of years ago, closely resemble the algae growing in the sea at the present time, is the statement made by Charles D. Walcott, secretary of the Smithsonian institution, in describing, in a recent publication of that institution fossil remains of these ancient sea plants discovered by him in the Middle

Phenomenon Caused Alarm.

It is recorded in the Gentlemen's Magazine that on January 3, 1756, at four o'clock in the afternoon, at Tuam, in Ireland, an unusual light, far above that of the brightest day, struck all the beholders with amazement. It then faded away by invisible degrees; but at seven, from west to east, a "sun of streamers" appeared across the sky, undulating like the waters of a rippling stream. A general feeling of alarm was excited by this phenomenon. The streamers gradually became dissolved, and flashed away to the north, attended by a shock which all felt, but which did no damage. The affair seems to have been an example of Aurora Borealis, only singular in its being bright enough to fall upon the daylight.

UNDAUNTED TWINS

By CORONA REMINGTON

(Copyright.)

"Help! Help! Oh, anybody, help!"

Constance Maynert stood on tiptoe and, straining every muscle, tried her best to reach it, but she missed the mark by fully six inches.

"Help! Help!" she screamed again as she stamped her foot and attempted once more to span the distance.

On the verge of hysterics, half laughing and half weeping, she struggled and twisted and turned and pivoted endlessly.

"If I ever get my hands on you!" she threatened, clenching her fists and shaking them in midair; but her words brought forth only echoes from the big silent house.

The girl listened to the sounds outside—a machine went gliding past, then a street car and a truck; but, of course, they could not hear her. At last a car pulled up to the curbing and stopped. Constance shut her eyes tight and put all her force in her next scream. With electric rapidity thumping foot-steps rushed on the porch and a heavy bulk threw itself against the door. It was locked and refused to yield. Fearing her rescuer might escape, Constance repeated her supplications with renewed vigor. In a frenzy her deliverer hurled a flower pot through one of the big plate glass windows and followed on its heels. A second later he stood petrified before her.

"Tom!" she exclaimed.

"For the love of Mike!" ejaculated the young man, his face relaxing. "I thought you were bound, gagged and strangled with three daggers stuck through you."

"I didn't yell like it, did I?"

"Fact, but who ever played such a trick on you?" asked Tom, beginning to laugh.

"If you laugh I'll kill you when I get loose," threatened the girl.

"But how did it happen?" he inquired again.

"I—I washed my hair this morning and braided it up to dry and those twin cousins of mine caught me and tied my plait to the chandelier for a joke. Then they bolted and I have been screaming ever since, but there is no one to hear me, as Aunt Flossy's uptown. You'd think Ralph and Jack were grammar school kids instead of college men.

"Hurry up and untie me, then tell me what you are doing here."

"I must insist on telling you first," he answered, "and I've got you where I want you now. I came here to ask you for the fortieth time to marry me. You know you're going to do it in the end, so why keep me dangling any longer? I'll untie you when you've said 'yes,' then we'll cook up some scheme to avenge ourselves on the twins."

Tom sat down and examined a book.

"Say when you're ready and don't forget we're going to get back at the twins."

Constance's deep blue eyes grew almost black with anger.

"I just hate you!" she stormed.

Tom went over to her and took her hands, which she pettishly tried to wrench away.

"Constance," he said, suddenly grown solemn, "you can't look me in the eye and say that—you know you can't."

In reply she wept out her tears on his shoulder.

"I guess we'll have to be engaged now," she said a few minutes later, her plait still suspended from the chandelier, "because I always said I'd never let anybody but my fiance k-kiss me."

Tom promptly did it again, then untied her braid.

"I'll do what I can to help you get back at the twins this time, but I'll always love them," declared Tom.

"What'll we do to s-s-ave them?" inquired the girl.

He thought a few seconds.

"That smashed window looks spectacular," he commented. "Shall we try to frighten them a whole lot or just a little?"

"Oh, lots and lots," was the eager reply.

"All right then, suppose I write a note something like this:

"'I have reskewed your cusin and have her in safe keaping. You can have her back for $1,000 cash which put in lilly bed in her mothers yard at eleven tomorrow nite. If you don't do better we'll do worse. "The Black Hand."'"

"Great!" exclaimed the girl, her eyes dancing. "We'll turn the tables on them this time. Now I'll run upstairs and get ready. Be back in a jiffy."

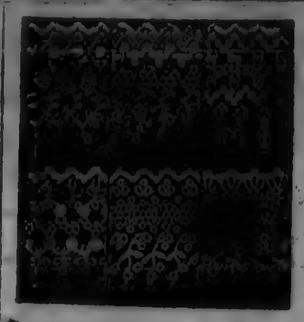
A few minutes later Constance came down dressed for the street, her cheeks pink with excitement.

"This is 'positively thrilling!'" she declared as they got into the car together.

"I never was so happy in my life," said Tom, "but I guess we'll cure the twins this time," he smiled.

"I hope it scares them into spasms," replied Constance fervently. "I pulled so hard when I tried to get loose from the chandelier that my scalp's still tingling."

The big touring car ate up the white road in front of it with remarkable speed, and they reached their destination long before sunset. As soon as the first excitement was over, Mrs. Maynert handed Tom a telegram.



"It arrived just before you did," she explained. "See, they addressed it care of me; so it must be some one who knew you were going to be here this afternoon."

Ripping open the envelope, he read:

"Dear Black Hand—Congratulations, old man! We were standing upstairs in the hall when you did it. You're a real cave man, all right; but we're glad to know how it's done—for future use. That's the only real one we've ever witnessed. Conny almost fell over us when she went upstairs to dress. She certainly can yell.

"The Undaunted Twins."

NEW RECIPE FOR ICING ON A ONE CRUST PIE

Take the whites of two eggs and beat till they are stiff, then add one tablespoon of salt to make it brown. This was tried by a nice young lady on the Hill and was a great success. The pie was a cream pie and the salt flavor in the icing went through the pie and gave it a very good flavor.

Graham Pudding.—Take one-half cupful of molasses, one-fourth cupful of sweet fat, one beaten egg, one-half cupful of sour milk, one-half teaspoonful of soda, a little salt, one and one-half cupfuls of graham flour, one cupful of raisins, and spices to taste. Steam four hours.

Prune Pudding.—Take one pound of prunes soaked over night and pitted, half cupful of butter substitute, one pint of coarse bread crumbs, one cupful of sugar, one-fourth cupful of molasses, three beaten eggs, half a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in one tablespoonful of milk, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, half a teaspoonful of cloves. Steam three hours.

Wedding Pudding.—Take one cupful of fat salt pork chopped fine, one cupful of chopped raisins, two cupfuls of sugar, three and one-half cupfuls of flour, two cupfuls of milk, one teaspoonful of soda, one of cloves and one of cinnamon; mix all the dry ingredients except the soda, which is dissolved in the milk, then add milk and beat well. Steam four hours. Serve with a rich fruit sauce.

Cocoa Tutti-Frutti Cream.—Use the recipe for cocoa cream, adding one-half cupful of macaroons, which have been dried and pounded, one cupful of candied cherries cut in small pieces, one-half dozen marshmallows cut in bits and one-half dozen raisins, one tablespoonful each of citron and orange peel, chopped fine; add the last just before putting into the molds.

Chocolate Sauce.—Cook the following ingredients in a double boiler: One cupful of milk, two egg yolks, one-quarter cupful of sugar, a pinch of salt, one teaspoonful of butter, two ounces of chocolate or one-quarter cupful of cocoa. Cook until the mixture coats the spoon. Serve hot on ice cream.

Deaths

John Alexander Martindale, the subject of this sketch was born at Ewington, Gallia county, Ohio, March 31, 1839, and died March 19, 1920, after a brief illness at his late residence, 343 S. Warren Ave., this city, lacking two days of being 81 years old.

In his boyhood days he joined the Methodist church and always lived a faithful clean life.

Was educated in the common school and academy of his day and taught school for about 25 years teaching in the winter and farming in the summer.

In August, 1861, he heard his country's call for men and enlisted in Company "A" 91st Ohio Volunteer Infantry and served three years, was in 23 battles and came through unharmed by bullets or shell.

Was a member of the G. A. R. for a good many years and served as commander of Corwin and later Harry Mason Posts. At the time of his death was a member of Wells Post in this city. He was also a Mason.

December 24, 1868, was married to Olive Ruth Weed of Gallia county, and to them was born ten children, five boys and five girls, all of whom, with 19 grandchildren and one great grandchild survive. One brother and one sister are also living. But his companion had preceded him to "those mansions" of which he often spoke and sang, by about eight months and there is now a glad reunion of hearts that were one for more than fifty years. His friends were legion, for he made friends wherever he went.

"When the cares of life have ended,
And I cross the silent stream,
As I reach the heav'nly portal,
And its glories on me beam,
I shall hear the song of welcome,
As I pass within the wall,
I shall see the Savior coming
And shall know his loving call.

"I shall know my blessed Savior
When he comes to greet me there,
When he takes me to him gently,
Bids me all these blessings share.
I shall hear his voice so tender
And his kindly face shall see
I shall rest upon his bosom,
Praise him thro' eternity.
"O, the joy of that glad meeting!
Precious thot it thrills me now;
I shall hear him bid me welcome,
Feel his kiss upon my brow.
There I'll sing the songs of Zion,
There with saints communion hold,
There I'll shout glad hallelujahs,
Safe within the heavenly fold."
The funeral services were held at Glenwood M. E. church at 2:30 Monday and the remains were laid to rest in the beautiful Green Lawn cemetery beside the beloved wife.

Miss Java Sowers, aged 30 years, died of complications at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Pryor, 66 S. Wheatland Ave. The funeral was held at Mt. Sterling, O., with burial in Mt. Sterling cemetery. She leaves a father, mother, one sister and one brother.

Mr. Joshua R. Garver, retired farmer, died of hardening of the arteries on Thursday, March 18th, at the home of Mrs. Margaret R. Cummins, 115 North Warren avenue, where he had been making his home. He was 79 years of age and came to Columbus from Martinsville, Ohio, in 1918, at which place the body was taken last Saturday for burial.

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY

Whereas God, in His infinite wisdom and mercy has seen fit to remove from our midst the form of our beloved brother, J. A. Martindale; and

Whereas, Brother Martindale served so long and efficiently during his latter years upon this Official Board of the Glenwood M. E. church. Be it

Resolved, that we, as the members of the Official Board, extend to the bereaved family of Brother Martindale, our heartfelt sympathy and love in this their time of sorrow and bereavement and pledge to them the same Christian affection and devotion that characterized the life of the departed.

W. L. Roller, D. S. Ulrey, H. C. Keefer, committee.

We wish to thank our many friends, relatives and neighbors for their kindness and sympathy shown us at the death of our dear father, Hiram S. Brown and all who sent such beautiful flowers in his memory, the Hilltop Undertaking Co. for their efficient service.

Mrs. Chas. Wilson, daughter and Frank Brown and Harold Brown, sons.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Hill, North Harris avenue, had as their guest Saturday, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chalfant of Sunny Side Farm, near Bluffton, Ind., and M. B. Loos and Miss Marguerite Loos, 1398 East Long street.

COLUMBUS WILL BE ADVERTISED ALL OVER THE WORLD

There is on foot at present such a move being advanced by an association in Columbus known as the Industrial Development Association. This move is for the betterment of our city in the move to bring more manufacturers to our city, to help the housing troubles, to encourage more to own their own homes, to beautify the city, to draw the citizens of Columbus closer together. On Wednesday evening, April 7, 1920, at the West Broad Street school the Hilltop Improvement Association will hold its regular meeting and at that time will have a man who is versed in this movement out to explain this movement. Now this meeting is not only for the members but for every man and woman on the Hilltop. We should wake up to this fact that we are a big part of the city and take a lively interest in any and all movements toward the betterment of the city. Come out and be a booster.

Hilltop Improvement Association.

Hill Crest Baptist Sunday school boosted this week's list of contributions to the Hilltop European Child Relief Fund by giving an amount of $117.[illegible]. This certainly is a splendid [illegible] from that school and we are confident they will be repaid abundantly in blessings for so doing. As was stated the first of February, this effort by the Record was to run till April 1st. Therefore we have but one more week to go till the time is up. We hope many who have not yet contributed will do so the next week. Why not make this next week the greatest yet and therefore be able to send an extra large Easter offering to this worthy cause? Do it now! Following is the report of money received to date:

STEERING FOR HEAVEN

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

Muriel turned and faced John Gibson as they stood beneath the amber light in her father's spacious hall.

"This is good-by, John," she said quietly.

"Good-by! Why good-by and why so serious? I am coming tomorrow to take you skating and—"

"No you are not." Muriel's voice was firm. "I am not going to the Faulkners' skating tea, nor to Maud Guthrie's Pomeranian breakfast, nor to Jimmy Rogers' jam swimming party. I am going to steer my bark toward heaven—when I leave you tonight." She smiled softly while an expression quite misunderstood by Gibson filled her eyes.

"Where is this place called heaven—is it on the Long Island route?"

"It may be on the Long Island map and it may not be," said Muriel. "I don't know. But I do know it is not to be found at the Faulkners' nor the Guthries' nor any place within my present vision." Muriel turned away her eyes. There was a wistful something in the depths of them that she thought John had better not see.

"We had a jolly time at Dick's tonight. The wine was not bad, considering our dryness, the music glorious and you—you were there in your fragrance and beauty." Gibson's voice had softened. "What more does a man want?"

"Nothing more, apparently," said Muriel, and the wistfulness had turned into something a bit hopeless, "but a woman does. At least," she corrected, "I want more. I want a bit of heaven and I am going to find it." Her voice had become vibrant. The haunting emptiness of life as she had found it gleamed through Muriel's tones. "I hate every silly, vapid, meaningless hour spent as our friends spend them—wasting golden hours comparing Pomeranian noses, discussing latest degeneracies, drinking loathsome mixtures while vulgar singers and more vulgarly undressed dancers try to arouse our jaded emotions."

"You've always enjoyed—"

"No. I have hated it all. There is not one soul in our entire ultra-smart set that I would walk across the avenue to chat with except you. I suppose way down in the depths, unexplored though they be, of you there is something that appeals to me, at least that part of me which is about to steer for heaven, otherwise I would not have told you this." She extended a warm, firm hand. "I have not mentioned it to any one else."

Gibson drew her hand against his side and spoke rapidly.

"Muriel, don't leave me. You know I love you—have loved you for many months. For—his silly idea of heaven and marry me. I'll take you anywhere you like—Italy, Arabia, Japan! I fancy we'll be taking the opposite route to heaven if we go to any of those places just now, but, well—anything so long as you are mine."

Muriel shook her head.

"You will take me everywhere except to the one place I want to go. I must go, John. I will lose either my mind or my soul unless I turn sharply and steer away for heaven. I want to find a place where men and women love one another because of the soul within them, where character and nobility and simplicity of nature count. I am sick of being loved because my ankle is slim or my eyes alluring or my clothes fantastic." Muriel paused a moment while a real disgust inflated her delicate nostrils. Then Gibson, his heart in his eyes, watched a dream flit into the face of the only girl he could ever love with all his fine strength. "There must be a country where lovers can walk on a road that winds under the moonlight like a silver ribbon and where birds sing in leafy trees and where the pun-

Hot String Bean Salad. Drain a can of beans and heat the liquor boiling hot; reduce it to a quarter of a cupful. Fry two slices of bacon until crisp, pour the hot fat with the liquor and three tablespoonfuls of boiling vinegar over the beans. Add the chopped bacon, and season highly with salt and a few dashes of cayenne. A bit of onion juice or a fried onion may be added for flavor, if liked.

BE PLEASANT

We cannot, of course, all be handsome,
And it's hard for us all to be good;
We are sure now and then to be lonely,
And we don't always do as we should.
To be patient is not always easy,
To be cheerful is much harder still;
But at least we can always be pleasant,
If we make up our minds that we will.
And it pays every time to be kindly,
Although you feel worried and blue;
If you smile at the world and look cheerful,
The world will smile back at you.
So try to brace up and look pleasant,
No matter how low you are down,
Good humor is always contagious,
But you banish your friends when you frown.—Selected.

PAYS TO HAVE CAMEL LORE

Sure Passport to Confidence of Arabs, as Evidenced by Experience of English Archaeologist.

One way to popularity with Arabs, it appears, is the acquirement of expert acquaintance with the camel, its character, habits, personal appearance, and history. Such knowledge, to be sure, is not a complete equipment for winning the confidence of Arabs, but, according to Lowell Thomas, describing, in Asia magazine, the ascendancy that an English archaeologist, now known to the world as Colonel Lawrence, gained over the desert tribes, it is a great help. Mr. Thomas, incidentally, has learned a good deal about the "ship of the desert" himself, and whoever reads his article will be that much better prepared to enjoy the menagerie of next summer's traveling circus, even if he never has occasion to "talk camel" with a surprised and delighted Arab. The finest breeds of camel, one learns, come from central Arabia, where there are six different species, some of which has more than one hump. And another name for this one-humped camel is "dromedary," which comes from the language of the Greeks, and means "a camel that runs." By his hump, moreover, shall ye know a camel, and this useful part of him should be of hard, fatless muscle. Nor should your camel be either too fat or too thin. Long legs are desirable and a small waist. Over good ground a first-class Arabian dromedary can trot as fast as 22 miles an hour, canter up to 28 miles, and gallop at 32. But for a whole day's journey seven miles an hour is his reasonable gait, and if you are starting on a journey of some hundreds of miles it is best to be patient and keep your camel at a walk. On one occasion, however, when speed was necessary, Colonel Lawrence did 300 miles in three days on camel back.

Alive After 2,000 Years.

Don't think that those microbes that were on that old book years ago when the baby had the croup have died of old age. Far from it. According to Dr. M. V. Gallippe, a noted French scientist, the life of a hardy microbe is practically endless. For years he has been experimenting, and he now states that he has seen microbes 2,000 year old. Taking an Egyptian papyrus, dating from about 300 years B. C., Doctor Gallippe has soaked it in water and has seen organisms, dormant for centuries, renew their lives and begin to multiply anew. Rather interesting, isn't it, but why do all the disease-giving things so far outlive the harmless things in the world?

Daily Thought.

Every person is responsible for all the good within the scope of his abilities, and for no more; and none can tell whose sphere is the largest.—Gail Hamilton.

By serving occasional oven dinners the cook can economize on fuel and attend to work in other parts of the home.

Baked Soup.—Use a large earthen bean pot. Cut up in small pieces two pounds of beef, cover with cold water, season with salt and pepper and place in the oven. Cook two hours, then add two cupfuls of shredded cabbage, four large potatoes sliced, two onions sliced, one bunch of celery cut fine. Add hot water and seasonings and cook another hour, strain and serve hot. The beef and vegetables may be ground for hash and the soup is especially good.

Pimiento Bisque.—Take three pints of chicken stock, one-half cupful of cooked rice, six canned red peppers put through a ricer, two teaspoonfuls of salt, half a teaspoonful of tabasco sauce and one-half cupful of cream.

Fillets of Veal.—Divide a loin of veal steak into as many portions as will be needed; pound and season with salt, pepper and a bit of powdered sage. Roll each and fasten securely with wooden toothpicks. Roll each fillet in crumbs, then in egg and crumbs again, salt and repeat the egg and crumbing. Run a sharp wire skewer through the fillets and suspend them over a pan in the oven, basting often with chicken fat or butter. They will have a delicious flavor when cooked. Garnish with parsley.

Tomato Salad.—An extremely pretty salad is the following: Peel and cut tomatoes into eights without separating the sections; place on a leaf of lettuce and fill the centers with pearl onions. Serve with French dressing to which has been added chopped green pepper.

Spanish Chops.—Gash French chops to the bone and fill with the following stuffing: Six tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, three tablespoonfuls of minced boiled ham, two tablespoonfuls of mushrooms and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Roll in egg and crumbs and fry in deep fat until well browned.

Parsnip Fritters.—Take left-over parsnips and press through a puree sieve. To a cupful of the puree, add one-fourth teaspoonful each of salt and pepper, a beaten egg and a dash of cayenne. Mix thoroughly and mold into five or six flat cakes. Cook in a small amount of butter, browning on both sides.

Bacon Fritters.—Prepare the fritter batter, dissolve one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt in one cupful of cold water and add it to the well-beaten yolks of two eggs which have been blended with one and one-half tablespoonfuls of melted butter or olive oil. Add one cupful of flour, beat well, cover and put in a cool place for two hours or over night. When ready to use, beat the whites stiff and fold in the mixture. Dip the slices of bacon in the batter or chop in rather coarse pieces. Fry in fat to float the fritters.

Corn Balls.—Put three tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan. When the butter is melted, add two cupfuls of molasses and two-thirds of a cupful of sugar. Stir until the sugar is dissolved. Boil until, when tried in cold water, the mixture becomes brittle. Pour over six quarts of popped corn. Butter the fingers and shape into balls.

Good Boiled Dressing.—Take two tablespoonfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, a half teaspoonful of mustard, a few dashes of cayenne, and when well blended add a cupful of cold water, two eggs and one-quarter cupful of strong vinegar. Cook until smooth and thick. When ready to use add four teaspoonfuls of the dressing to half a cupful of whipped cream. This dressing, well covered, will keep for weeks in a cool place.

Those who know tell us that the average American of the well-to-do class eats at least one-third more food than is necessary or safe, and that seven-eighths of our diseases are caused from improper food and also, in large degree, improper eating.

Horace Fletcher, who gave to the world so much on the way to eat and what to eat, advocated the long mastication of foods, chewing twice as long, and in consequence the appetite is satisfied with much less food.

A simple experiment which has been often repeated is that of chewing a mouthful of bread and butter until it swallows itself, without any effort. It will develop a flavor in the mouth which will be a surprise to all rapid eaters. The starch is partly changed by the action of the saliva which is never noticed when food is bolted.

On a busy day the house mother who can serve a wholesome one-piece dish which will be sufficiently satisfying is using economy both of time and of fuel. There are any number of such dishes from chowders to casserole dishes. The following has been given several times but may be repeated, it is so good: Put sufficient sliced potatoes in a shallow baking pan, for the family, cover with a finely sliced onion and pork chops fried on one side and placed cooked side down on the potatoes. Season well and bake until the potatoes are tender. No moisture need be added unless the potatoes have lost much moisture.

MENTAL ATTITUDE AIDS OR HINDERS DIGESTION

It is one of the essential fundamentals of health that a person should at all times maintain the proper mental attitude; and if there is one place more than any other where this is necessary, it is at the table, for if there is anger, hatred or disturbance at the dinner-table, the whole body is thrown out of the harmonious condition. When this is the case, digestion is not carried on properly. This has been known to cause even acute indigestion which sometimes proves very serious. Therefore, above all, let every parent make the meal-table a place of sunshine and happiness for the children, avoiding all disputed. If arguments must take place, they should be had away from the table.

Steering for Heaven

gent odor of balsam filters the air. We dash past all wonders in our motors intent on getting to some inn while the lobster is still on the grill."

She struggled breathlessly, for Gibson had jerked her swiftly into his arms and was laughing softly, if unsteadily, at her flaming cheeks. He pressed his lips to her rebellious, wistful mouth. She was molten gold in his arms.

"See, dear, I can take you by one route—to that place you're looking for—without craft or steering gear. Come, just trust me to land you safely in heaven."

But Muriel had regained command. She was a bit white, but her smile was mocking.

"It isn't a temporary heaven I'm steering for, nor one reached and sustained by electric wires."

She nodded, turned, and left Gibson.

He was torn between disappointment, passion and a keen appreciation of Muriel's tersely expressed comprehension of his route to heaven.

With a shrug of his shoulders he picked up his walking stick and hat, lit a cigarette, assumed a nonchalant carriage and walked out into the night. His mouth was rather splendidly set and his eyes contained a speculative expression that promised well for the appearance of a second pilgrim on that road toward heaven.

Summer days had passed and gone and cooler October days dawned on the countryside.

Mildred and her chauffeur, a fine strapping English girl, who during the war had driven an ambulance under the W. A. A. C., were stopping for the night on a bit of the Long Island road. The improvised caravan in which they had driven and lived during the summer was coolly wedged in a small nook that jutted out over the harbor at Cold Spring.

Muriel sprang lightly down onto the soft turf and then a few yards beyond to the sandy beach. There was a buoyancy in her movements, a brilliance in her eyes and a song in her heart. None of these had been a part of Muriel when she began her trip toward heaven in the early spring.

"Aren't we happy, Enid?" she called to the girl, who was even then hauling out blankets as if she caught Muriel's wish before it was formed. "And we can sleep on this lovely beach to-night. I often wonder why I was so blessed as to find you. You have enjoyed this summer as much as I have."

She looked affectionately at the girl who had seen all the destruction and ravages of a battlefield. "The haunted, suffering, drawn expression has lifted from your eyes. Our little pilgrimage this summer has at least hung a soft curtain over your memories."

The girls were lying down now full length on the beach watching the divine spectacle of the evening sun on the water.

They were unconscious that a sputtering flivver had pounded its way almost alongside their caravan and that John Gibson and his faithful man Pitchins were about to disturb their meditations.

"It looks as if you had found that spot called heaven!" John startled the girls into upright position with his greeting.

The rich crimson that flung across Muriel's cheeks was not due to the sunset's rays. Her meeting with John was a very lovely moment, for she had learned that giving freely and without restraint was one of the routes to heaven.

She slipped for a moment straight into the arms that swung around her, then laughed happily. So great a love as theirs was in no way averse to expressing itself.

And while Pitchins gathered driftwood and rocks toward the preparation of dinner, Enid and Muriel and John drew together the ends of the summer.

"We have been traversing Long Island looking for desolate farms and isolated humanity," said Muriel, "and we have gone straight in and offered our stock of cheer and hopefulness. Not only their minds and hearts have we bucked, but Enid and I carry a regular traveling store of chintz and cushions and cheerful accessories to drab homes and we have just done wonders—haven't we, Enid?"

"While I," said John, "have done nothing but keep well within protecting distance of you just in case the steering gear broke or the roads became too much for two wonderful girls to travel alone." He laughed at Muriel's utter amazement. "And now, if steering is still good, I think we will blaze a trail to-morrow morning for a quaint wee church that is not too far from this spot. What do you say, dear?"

The urge in Enid's eyes and the expectant expression in the face of Pitchins, who had hovered sufficiently near to hear, prompted Muriel's quick response.

"I told you I was going to steer my bark toward heaven," she said with a triumphant smile proclaiming the fact that she had reached her destination.

THE GOLDEN AGE

The Golden Age of Prophecy, by holy men foretold,
When Right shall triumph o'er the Wrong of centuries grown old;
When in the desert springs break forth, wastes blossom as the rose
And health and happiness are borne on every breeze that blows;
When Sin and Death shall pass away, and every human heart
Be filled with Love until this earth shall seem of heaven a part.

Ah! then, poor world, come dry your tears and banish every fear.
Lift up your heads, rejoice and sing—The Golden Age is here.

COLUMBUS WILL BE ADVERTISED ALL OVER THE WORLD

There is on foot at present such a move being advanced by an association in Columbus known as the Industrial Development Association. This move is for the betterment of our city in the move to bring more manufacturers to our city, to help the housing troubles, to encourage more to own their own homes, to beautify the city, to draw the citizens of Columbus closer together. On Wednesday evening, April 7, 1920, at the West Broad Street school the Hilltop Improvement Association will hold its regular meeting and at that time will have a man who is versed in this movement out to explain this movement. Now this meeting is not only for the members but for every man and woman on the Hilltop. We should wake up to this fact that we are a big part of the city and take a lively interest in any and all movements toward the betterment of the city. Come out and be a booster.

This is the last week of subscriptions for the Hilltop fund for starving children in Europe. As was announced the first of February the campaign was to run until April first. As will be seen the amount raised has nearly reached the $200.00 mark, which amount will take care of 40 children. Though we will do no more soliciting for this fund after April 1st yet anyone wishing to contribute to this may do so for a few days after that until we send the final amount to headquarters. We feel very much gratified at what has been accomplished and are satisfied that all others who have helped to increase this fund feel likewise. Following is the amount raised to date:

Previously reported $176.95.

The Straphanger

There is no fresher, purer air in the city than on the Hilltop.

The Straphanger takes a deep breath and a new lease on life, as he sways on the "friendly strap" coming up asylum hill.

It's a nice smooth ride from Sandusky to the hill. Wonder if it will all be that way after the fare increase.

First Citizen (East Broad Street) Who is that little short, sawed off man with the derby.

Second Citizen—That's Ed. Turner, the guy that knocked the "fur" out of re"fur"endum.

Speaking of "Crooks." If your opposition can not bring in crooked enough petitions, go out and help them bring in invalid ones.

Railway firemen accustomed to firing with bituminous coal, did not like it when called upon during Government control, to use anthracite coal. They called it "anaesthetic" coal because as they said "it put the fire to sleep."

Much interest is being taken in the driving of the coffer dam for the last pier of Broad Street bridge. As the remaining three arches are being constructed, people will begin to have visions of the completed structure in all its structural beauty. Picture at the same time, if you please, the completed channel and Victory Park on the east bank of the river.

What will you do to boost the Hilltop?

MAROONED

By MARY MORISON

(©, 1926, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Barbara sat on a moss-covered rock in the soft shade of a beech tree and wrote her best friend as follows:

"Dearest Peggy—Well, I'm going to do it at last. I'm going to meet Henry Buchanan, the rich and eligible, this afternoon at 5 o'clock and over our tea cups give him the fatal answer. And with a twenty-seventh birthday staring me in the face it's going to be distinctly affirmative.

"What a world we live in, Peg o' my heart! We quarrel with the only men about whom we ever cared a continental and marry the ones who fill the matrimonial bill with the least possible inconvenience. I know I shall be haunted all my days by the one romance I threw away—but I shall cross my Rubicon just the same at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

"In fact, I must hurry to it this minute. Shed one tear for the dead youth and lost illusions of yours, as ever, BARB."

With a sigh Barbara sealed her letter and rose. At twenty-six Barbara Bowen looked nineteen. Her crinkly brown hair had myriad little golden glints to it, her eyes were a deep, dark blue fringed with shadowy lashes, and her mouth—well, she had the most bewitching mouth in the world.

She made her way down to the old stump where she had "hitched" her canoe, and looked around in her amazement. What had happened? Where was her boat? The tide, steadily and mercilessly rising inch by inch gave her back no answer—but far off, floating gently up the river, she saw her only communication with the mainland and Henry Buchanan's tea party disappearing from view.

"He'll never forgive me!" thought Barbara in dismay. "What on earth shall I do?" and she sank down on the bank in helpless fury at the trick fate had played her. "Henry would forgive me for lying and stealing, but never for being late," she murmured. But the tide only rose the higher and at half past four no salvation was in sight.

As Barbara sat there, bitterly thinking of all the things in life she had missed and of one in particular, a sound—far off but insistent—came to her ears, a distant whirring that grew louder and louder. Up in the opal sky, where the sun was just beginning to set, she saw what looked like a great, white bird, approaching, soaring majestically along, master of time and tide.

She leaped to her feet, "S O S," she cried and catching up the vivid colored sweater beside her, she waved it violently and desperately in the air.

"I guess I'll marry Henry Buchanan after all," she said to herself, with a sigh.

The airplane was almost overhead now and Barbara waved as if her life depended on it. "I'm certainly exerting every effort," she thought.

The birdman circled around for a moment—then dove down until he reached the water—a long skim over its surface and he was alongside, cap in hand, ready to be of any assistance to beauty in distress.

Then they recognized each other.

"Jack, John Trumbull!" breathed Barbara, her hand at her throat.

The stern lines around John Trumbull's mouth hardened and then relaxed into the kind of smile that made men want to claim him as a friend and children and dogs love him on the spot, and women—well, he had had his share of encouragement from women, too. He looked at Barbara and saw her lovelier than even his most vivid memories had painted and said:

"How are you, Barbara? It is five years ago yesterday since we last saw each other."

Barbara nodded. From the church steeple in the distance the village clock struck five times. On the steps of the clubhouse she could fancy a tall figure, disapprovingly waiting.

"What's the matter, Babs?" asked John Trumbull, "you weren't waving that pink sweater just for exercise, were you?" and he laughed a little shakily.

"Johnny," said Barbara, desperately, "there's a man waiting over at the clubhouse for me to tell him that I will marry him, and my canoe's gone off and left me. Will you give me a lift?"

"Oh!" said John Trumbull, and he helped Barbara into the machine without another word.

The powerful engines skimmed the water, leaving behind a streak of white foam, and then they lifted—rising higher and higher—until it seemed to Barbara that they were making straight for the heart of the sunset sky. To their right a little new moon shone at them from her soft height and here and there a star sparkled brilliantly. The air was clean and sweet as they cut through it on their way toward the village. As they neared the end of their flight Barbara knew that the one thing in the world she did not want to do was to meet Henry Buchanan on the clubhouse steps.

They were now circling over the club. Far, far down, alone in the dusk, she saw a solitary figure waiting.

"Oh, please, Johnny," she cried, laying her hand on Trumbull's arm. "Please not just yet!"

Still without a word he soared upward again. She breathed a sigh of relief as the figure on the steps disappeared from view.

"Barbara," said a stern voice in her ear, "do you want to marry this man?"

"No, no! I won't marry him," cried Babs, giving voice to all the pent-up regrets and emotions of the last few years. "Oh, Johnny, I'll stay a spinster all my life before I'll marry him!"

The sky was covered with brilliantly twinkling stars now, and the sun had completely disappeared. Barbara felt rather than saw John Trumbull's expression as he leaned toward her and spoke over the whirring of the engines.

"Five years is a long time, and I've tried everything in the hope that I could forget. But I never could, Barbara."

She laid a little trembling hand on his sleeve. "There never was anybody else in the world but you, really, Johnny. I was a little fool five years ago, and I——"

She never finished her sentence, for up there, many hundred feet above old Mother Earth, John Trumbull kissed her. And the little new moon twinkled merrily as she saw it and noticed that the solitary figure on the steps below had disappeared into the gayly lighted clubhouse.

The Elite Embroidery club gave a St. Patrick's day party for husbands and families of members at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Spangler, of North Ogden avenue, Thursday. The evening was spent playing games and in various contests. The house was prettily decorated in green and white, and the same color scheme was carried out in the refreshments. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Bents and son Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Jenkins and son John, Mr. and Mrs. George Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Housdashelt and son Kenneth, Mrs. Frank Wilkins and Mr. and Mrs. Spangler, their daughter Betty Jean and sons Bobby and Dick, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Fisher and daughter, Mary Ruth, were guests of the club.

To the churches of the Hilltop, Greetings:—In Jesus' name. Finally my brethren be strong the Lord and in the power of His might. Put on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.

Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about you with truth and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace above all taking the shield of faith wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of Salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints. And this I pray that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment. That ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offense till Jesus comes. Woe unto the world because of offenses, for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh! But who hath believed our report and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed. He is despised and rejected of men a man of sorrow acquainted with grief. Yet we hid as it were our faces from him he is despised and we esteemed him not. Marvel not at this for the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; that they have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation. There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.

What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us who can be against us. I beseech you therefore brethren by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies, a living sacrifice, Holy, acceptable unto God which is your reasonable service, and be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable, and perfect will of God.

So we being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good. For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Amen.

A great Scientist has been in our midst. He spent two hours in an exhaustive attempt to tell his hearers what he knew about the Devil Doctrine of Spiritualism, then took his one thousand dollars got on the sleeping car and went his happy way with his thousand; we were reminded of the verse of scripture "The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound thereof, but cannot tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth."

Apostle of Liberty.

Pattison considers that the great and special feature of Milton's prose works is the fact that through the whole series of them runs the redeeming characteristic that they are all written on the side of liberty. It may be religious liberty, or civil, or domestic, or the liberty of the press, or the liberty of the conscience, but liberty is the main spirit that distinguished them. . . . His tracts carried with them their own protests for the liberty of the press, for, as a rule, they were issued unlicensed, and unregistered, and whatever may have been the faults in their conception, they had about them a breezy fearlessness, no matter what the topic was to which they alluded.—George C. Williamson.

Appreciation for the Potato.—

In this country the chief, and practically only interest in the potato today is as a vegetable for the table. We are greatly surpassed in this use by Europe, and Germany in particular. In that land the average annual per capita consumption was seven bushels in normal times, while our own was two and a half. The laborers of eastern Germany ate 17 bushels per annum. The other European countries are, as a rule, far above us and the diet of many an Irishman is said to be potatoes and spring water—for breakfast, dinner and supper. In addition to this direct consumption, uses of the potato largely unknown to Uncle Sam are the flour, starch, dextrine, glucose and alcohol.

A Good "Life."

A good "Life" is a portrait of a man, and something more than that; and requires a union of qualities, by no means common, in the writer. With respectable abilities, a biographer can produce a judicious and sensible narrative of the career of a remarkable person; or with respectable abilities of a lighter kind, he may seize the picturesque traits of his individuality and achievements. But it is very rare to find a master in both departments—one whose judgment enables him to discern what is really significant in the little accessories of biography (as anecdotes, etc.), and who has a genius at the same time equal to fine dramatic delineation.—From James Rumney's "Course of English Literature."

Tactics That Ended the War.

Benjamin Church of Plymouth called the "Miles Standish of the second generation," was the only white man who understood Indian fighting at the time of King Philip's war, and was chosen to take command of the colonists' forces.

Enlisting some friendly Indians and commanding an additional small force, Church immediately changed the whole character of the war by trailing Philip as a hunter trails a deer, and caught up with him in a swampy region at Mount Hope, where the Indian chief was shot by one of the red men who fought on the side of the whites. Anawan, Philip's most valiant assistant, was captured about two weeks later, the strength of the uprising being broken.

—Groundhog Day.

A delve into folklore and mythology reveals "groundhog day" as February 2, or Candlemas day. In early times, when statistics were not available, Feb. 2 was thought to be a fair average date for the breaking up of winter. At the approach of cold weather in the fall the groundhog curls up asleep at the bottom of its burrow. When the midwinter thaw is supposed to be at hand the groundhog comes out. By a peculiar instinct the groundhog is supposed to be able to foretell the weather for weeks ahead. At any rate, according to the story, when his sagacity tells him that an early breakup is at hand, he stays out. When a storm threatens he pops into his hole again and goes to sleep for six weeks.

Mark Twain Anecdote.

In his autobiography, "A Quaker Singer's Recollections," David Bispham tells of visiting Mark Twain at "Stormfield" in 1908, where he took part in an impromptu concert in which Miss Clara Clemens assisted:

"We were introduced by Mark Twain himself, clad in his distinctive suit of white flannel, which served to set off his magnificent head of snowy hair and he was in great fettle. After a little speech which convulsed his hearers he presented us who were to make music for his guests, saying shrewd and complimentary things about us men, and in conclusion: 'While Mr. Gabrilowitsch and Mr. Bispham are much better known than my daughter, they are not near so good looking.'"

True Manliness.

A man only begins to be a man when he ceases to whine and revile, and commences to search for the hidden justice which regulates his life. And as he adapts his mind to that regulating factor, he ceases to accuse others as the cause of his condition, and builds himself up in strong and noble thoughts, ceases to kick against circumstances, but begins to use them as aids to his more rapid progress, and as means of discovering the hidden powers and possibilities within himself.—James Allen.

Feline Hero.

We once read that cats cannot reason; that they have no brains. That statement cannot be true. We do not believe it is.

James Taylor heard a cat mewing piteously as he passed the door of Mrs. Bridget Shay's apartment at 162 Kingsland avenue. Knowing that the aged woman was alone, and suspecting something might be wrong, Taylor forced the door and entered the apartment. He found Mrs. Shay unconscious in bed. A gas jet was open. The woman was hurried to a hospital. Then Taylor looked around for the cat.

The cat was dead.—New York Times.

—Fondant.—For a foundation for all bon bons and French candies this is the base: Boil together two cupfuls of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of corn syrup and one-half cupful of water to the soft ball stage. Pour out on a buttered platter and when cool enough to handle work with a wooden spoon and knead until smooth. Put away in a buttered bowl to ripen for a day or two. This candy may be mixed with fruit, colored and flavored to taste, molded in balls and dipped in melted chocolate for chocolate cream or mixed with nuts.

Marshmallow Peaches. — Arrange halves of peaches on a dessert dish. Whip cream, sweeten and flavor with almond. Place a spoonful of the cream in the cavity of the peach with a fresh marshmallow on top.

Stuffed Onions and Chestnuts.—Parboil ten onions until tender; cut off the tops and scoop out the centers. Chop these fine, seasoning with salt and pepper and chopped parsley; mix with half a cupful of bread crumbs and one-quarter cupful of melted butter. Put in a spoonful of the mixture and three or four blanched chestnuts, then another spoonful. Bake slowly, basting with butter and hot water.

Baked Onions and Cheese.—Parboil a half dozen even-sized onions, drain and put a layer into a baking dish, then cover with a layer of rich white sauce and three or four tablespoonfuls of cheese, grated or minced; repeat with another layer of onions, seasoning well with salt and paprika; cover with the white sauce and cheese and finish with a thick covering of buttered crumbs. Bake until the crumbs are brown.

Onion Salad.—Chop one or more Southern onions, mix with minced parsley and French dressing, highly seasoned with salt and cayenne. Serve on head lettuce.

The Straphanger

Misses (Mrs) Ippi and Della Ware must be anti-suffragets but May not Miss Ouri come to the rescue?—(Apologies to the Passing Show.)

We are in favor of H. H. following W. W. in the White House.

This snow will be better than so much rain on our reconstruction garden. It will mellow the clods and not compact the earth.

It's the same old strap. It squeaks just as loud at five cents as it did at three and one-eighth.

Sixty per cent increase ought to pave lots of streets, extend some lines and otherwise generally improve the service.

Things are never so bad but what they might be worse. What if we lived in Toledo?

Nine cent fare and a "will-o-the-wisp" street car system are some of the troubles of the people in our neighboring city on the Maumee. Give us "the good old Columbus town."

Lets all pay our fare and maybe we can get some new paint on the cars. Soon will come Clean up, Paint up week.

A man is known by the enemies he makes. If you get too busy in advocating personal and civic morality, you can expect an attack from those just so inclined.

Opie Moore sounds like a prayer for more signatures, but we don't think he did.

STRAP HANGER

At 7 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, March 30th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Carter, 21 S. Wheatland Ave., the marriage of their daughter Emma Gilberta to Mr. Harry Holroyd of Steubenville, Ohio, was solemnized. Rev. C. E. Turley of Oxford, Ohio, performed the ceremony in the presence of 25 relatives and close friends. Among the guests were: Miss Mary Holroyd of Steubenville and Mr. Howard Holroyd of Cleveland, sister and brother of the bride-groom; Mr. O. H. Carter, of Philadelphia; Mr. Clyde Moore and Mr. Willis Batton of Akron; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Williams, of Westerville, Mrs. C. E. Turley, of Oxford. Miss [illegible]erite Carter, sister of the bride, maid of honor, and Mr. [illegible] of Akron, was best man. [illegible] Haner rendered two [illegible] vocal selections, "I Love You Truly" and "Oh! ## Hilltop 1920 Diary

By TOP. O'HILL

April 2.—Cackling of Hilltop hens getting ready for Easter heard on all sides.

April 3.—Hilltop colored lady got on street car and asked for 25 cents worth of tickets, got a strip of new "fives" which brought forth the remark, "Law me 'fo'd uv knowed that I'd a walked."

April 4.—Easter programs in nearly all churches. Sudden change to colder in weather causes many Hilltop ladies to take off their furs which had made their appearance as a summer necessity (?)

April 5.—Snowed a good deal of the day, but——

April 6.—Snowed all day. Considerable talk about Old King Winter being seen lingering in the lap of Miss Spring.

FALLS FROM ROOF, IS BADLY HURT

Fred Martin, 42, of 159 N. Oakley Ave., may be hurt internally as a result of a 25-foot fall at the new home of Dr. W. D. Inglis, Grandview Heights, Tuesday, when a scaffold upon which he was working, broke.

Martin, an employe of Geo. Snyder & Son, roofers, 166 N. Ninth St. was working near the roof when the scaffold collapsed. He fell to the roof of a porch below and rolled from there to the ground. He is reported as getting along as well as could be expected.

Dr. Wykoff, pastor of Glenwood M. E. Church delivered his farewell sermon last Sunday evening to a large and appreciative audience, and at the close of the service an informal reception was held at the Parsonage.

As only a small part of the crowd could get into the house, an overflow was held in the church. At the close of the meeting a substantial sum of money was presented to Dr. Wykoff by those present. He expressed himself as highly pleased with his last day at Glenwood, and greatly appreciated the large number of loyal friends.

The April meeting of the Glenwood Home Missionary Society will be held at the home of Mrs. M. L. Stevenson, 80 Midland Ave., Thursday, April 15th at 2 p. m. This is the annual Mite Box opening and the District Mite Box Secretary, Mrs. Geo. Wilson has promised to be with us. Let every member come with Mite Box overflowing and make this the banner Mite Box opening.

Ladies' slip-over sweaters, $4.98.—Seillers.

W. C. T. U. will meet with Mrs. Carter, 21 S. Wheatland Ave., Friday, April 9th, at 2 p. m. Everyone invited. Come and see how the little crowd of women is doing.

When Pa is sick, he's scared to death;
An' Ma an' us just holds our breath.
He crawls in bed, an' puffs an' grunts,
An' does all kinds of crazy stunts.
He wants Doc Brown, an' mighty quick
For when Pa's ill he's awful sick.
He gasps an groans, an' sort o' sighs,
He talks so queer, an' rolls his eyes.
Ma jumps an' runs, an' all of us,
An' all the house is in a fuss,
An' peace an' joy is mighty skeerce—
When Pa is [illegible] it's something fierce.

When Ma is sick she [illegible]ps away
She's quiet though not much t' say.
She goes right on a-[illegible]oin' things,
An' sometimes laughs, [illegible] or even sings.
She says she don't fe[illegible] extra well.
But then it's just a [illegible]kind o'spell.
She'll be all right to[illegible]morrow, sure.
A good old sleep will be the cure
An' pa he sniffs an' makes no kick.
For women folks is always sick,
An' Ma, she smiles, let's on she's glad
When Ma is sick it ain't so bad.

Inexplicable Demand.

"I never found anybody who believed what a ouija board says," remarked one salesman.

"Neither have I," replied the other. "I am entirely at a loss to explain how we sell so many."

Dutiful.

Hub—Why do you wear that costume? It looks like half mourning.

Wife—Well, every evening when you come home from the office you complain of being half dead.—Boston Transcript.

The following telegram is from Bishop Wm. F. Anderson, concerning the new pastorate field of Dr. W. F. Wykoff, who has been pastor of Glenwood M. E. Church:

Youngstown, O., Apr. 3, 1920.

Rev. J. C. Jackson:

I hope Wellston Church will give Dr. Wykoff a cordial welcome. He is a strong, attractive, eloquent preacher, a devoted, successful pastor. I predict Wellston Church will make rapid advances under his leadership.

Signed: WM. F. ANDERSON.

The Official Board of Wellston Church has taken action, extending a unanimous, open-arm welcome to Dr. Wycoff as their pastor.

The J. R. B. Class of Glenwood Church will have their annual banquet at the church, April 13, 75 cents per plate, no plates reserved after Sunday, so please girls have your money in by that time. Plenty of good eats and a good time is assured. Committee: Mrs. B. J. Dildine, Hilltop 2238; Mrs. Allen, Hilltop 3572; Mrs. Fleming, Hilltop 251; Mrs. Clevenger, 112 N. Park Ave.

Confirmation dresses.—Seillers.

A number of the girls from Glenwood Church, attended the annual Queen Esther banquet, Friday, Apr. 2nd, at First M. E. Church. A very interesting program was rendered. Those present were: May Haas, Ada Walpole, Edna Meidrim, Lula Meldrim, Lowie Mitchell, Verla Schaffer, Florence Hoak, Edith Smith, Hazel Hibler, Ruth Curran and Esther Ellis.

Announcement

To my many friends and former customers I wish to announce that I have purchased the building located at 20 S. Park Ave., formerly occupied by Wm. J. Dunn and have opened a first class automobile repair shop. I will also carry a small stock of tires and accessories of the better sort, and give special attention to the supplying of "genuine" Ford parts. I will continue the expressing service which has been located at this address, for which purpose I have purchased a new truck of ample capacity, and wish to assure all the best of service.

Antiquity of Wheat.

There is evidence that the Chinese cultivated wheat nearly 5,000 years ago, regarding it as a direct gift from heaven. The Egyptians attributed it to their god Isis and the Greeks to Ceres. Concerning the latter it was believed that when she had taught her favorite, Triptolemus, how to till the soil and make bread she gave him her chariot, and in that he traversed the world, distributing corn to all nations. Wheat growing in Egypt can by the evidence of a grain found imbedded in the brick of a pyramid be traced back to 3359 B. C. Varieties of wheat are legion. A French firm in its trial seed grounds had over 600 varieties growing, and since then crossing has increased the number.

Cooling Underground Electric Cables.

Underground electric cables frequently become heated to the danger point. A company in Detroit has constructed a portable blower that will cool the cables. The blower is equipped with a twenty-eight-inch fan connected to a 7.5-horsepower motor. A discharge pipe from the blower is inserted in a circular sheet-iron plate having the same diameter as the manhole to be covered, and the two are then cemented together to make an airtight joint. The circular plate is fitted over the manhole nearest to the overheated section of the cable, and the motor is started.—Popular Science Monthly.

Got Him Worrying.

Tom—You don't really imagine that girls actually propose sometimes, do you?

Dick—Well, all I know is that this is leap year and some girls are getting married who never got married before.—Boston Transcript.

Canada's Lumber.

In the lumber industry of Canada the investment is more than $180,000,000. There are more than 3,000 operating plants employing 60,000 men, and the annual wages and salaries approximate $50,000,000.

Coats and Suits.—Seillers.

D. Childres, 299 S. Wheatland Ave., plowing, hauling, also manure for sale. Hilltop 3207.

Church Doings

GLENWOOD METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Preaching morning and evening by Rev. Bowman.

Epworth League at 6:30. Topic, "What Shall We Do With Our Sundays?" Leader, Leslie Suanson.

On account of the illness of the bass in the quartette at the Glenwood M. E. Church the Easter music, which was to have been given last Sunday was postponed but will be rendered next Sunday instead. The special music will be given at both the morning and evening services. Everybody cordially invited.

St. John Lutheran

Services at 10:30 a. m. Pastor's topic, "Jesus Gives Peace to His Disciples." There will be no evening services but all who hoped to attend services at St. John's are urged to attend services in Trinity Lutheran Church, 3rd and Mound Sts., at 7:30. Rev. H. J. Schuh, who has just returned from a visit to the war torn countries of Europe will deliver an address on conditions as he found them among the Lutheran people of Europe. The services at Trinity are of course open to the public.

St. John's Ladies' Aid Society will meet with Mrs. Beh, Fremont and Powell Sts., on Wednesday afternoon, April 14th.

HILLTOP CHURCH OF CHRIST

Everybody should hear St. Olafs College choir at Memorial Hall on Monday evening April 12th.

HOGE MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

10:30 a. m. Morning worship and sermon, "Taking Inventory."

Children's sermon, "Who is your Hero?"

7:30 p. m. Evening worship and sermon, "Guess Again!" A good dose for spiritual uncertainty. We welcome you.

Infant baptism will be administered Sabbath morning. Parents are invited to bring their babies to be baptized.

HILL CREST BAPTIST CHURCH

Sunday School at 9:30, Ray Evans Superintendent. Morning worship 10:30, theme, "More Precious Than Gold."

Juniors at 2:30, Ella Withrow, leader.

Evening service 7:30. Baptism at this service. prayer meeting Wednesday at 7:30 p. m.

We had one of the greatest days in the history of the church Easter Sunday. Ten new members were received and several others are coming. The Easter Thanksgiving offering was $365.66. The church was overflowing in the evening. We are sorry we had to turn so many away on account of lack of room.

Mr. W. E. Knox is planning to repeat some of the numbers of choruses at different times on Sunday evenings. All present were well pleased with the music, readings and illustrated talk by the pastor, Rev. A. E. Cowley.

ST. PAUL UNITED EVANGELICAL

Public worship at 10:30 a. m. Subject of sermon, "The Church's Great Opportunity."

Intermediate Endeavor at 6:30 p. m. Subject, "What Shall We Do With Our Sundays?"

Evangelistic service at 7:30 p. m. Subject of sermon, "The Gospel and the Common People."

If you have just moved to the Hilltop you will find a warm welcome at this church. Come and worship with us.

Bishop W. F. Heil of Allentown, Pa., and Rev. L. R. Herbst, of Baltimore, O., are making a Missionary tour in the Ohio Conference and will be at the St. Paul United Evangelical church on Thursday afternoon and evening of April 15. They will address the Women's Missionary Society at 2:30 p. m. and Bishop Heil will preach at 7:30 p. m.

Don't fail to hear Bishop Heil who is one of the most forceful speakers of the United Evangelical church. Come though you are not a member of the church.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST CHURCH

Dr. G. R. Robbins will preach Sunday on the following unique topics: Morning, "A Well Groomed Preacher Makes A Well Groomed People."

Evening, "I and Just a Few People With Me Doing Amazing Things."

Every thing asked of the Lord and the church members to be done was accomplished fully Easter Sunday, all the numbers and all the money. If any persons reading this notice have spent all and are no better physically or mentally let them come and kneel at the altar in this church and call upon the GREAT PHYSICIAN AND SEE IF THEY MAY NOT BE HEALED. Wonderful miracles of healing are wrought in this Memorial Baptist Church. Its a shame and sin for many people being sick when in answer to prayer and faith they could be divinely healed. Try it.

A TIMES SQUARE ADVENTURE

By WILL T. AMES

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate

The crowd on Broadway at Times Square is as many kinds of a crowd as there are pairs of eyes to watch it and minds to speculate upon it. Take it on a Saturday afternoon when the theaters have poured out their matinee audiences to swell the already teeming multitude, and a hypersensitive temperament is liable to shrink from it in something much like terror; for then it becomes a mere moving mass, the individuality of each component human atom merged and lost in it like that of a pebble in a stream of lava. To the less imaginative, the crowd is likely to be only an inconveniently large number of persons going home from shows or headed for places to eat. To the cynic it is a crowning example of the folly of man, that he should choose to jam himself into eighteen inches square of shifting space, and be elbowed and as well have eighteen miles if he so elected.

To Edna Stearns the Times Square crowd on the particular afternoon when she found herself a part of it seemed to consist entirely of ogling eyes.

Now there is a type of woman, generally very young, sorely given to finding, in the most casual glance of a man—any man—a wicked intent to flirt. Be it stated definitely and once for all that Edna Stearns was not of this type. The reason she felt that she was being unduly stared at lay in the fact that she was indeed being stared at in just that way. And the reason for that fact again is to be found in the further fact that she was an unusual looking girl.

For Edna had very beautiful red hair and a great deal of it, and big tawny eyes with surprising dark lashes and brows. Men of a certain stamp will always stare at a girl like that; and perhaps more openly and more hopefully, on Times Square, if the girl be a small-town girl and hasn't been in the city long enough to have acquired the habits of dress and the assurance of manner of the initiate. And that was the case with this girl.

It was a new experience for Edna, for she had never been on this part of Broadway before in her six months of bread-winning in the metropolis. And the manner of the experience's effect on her might have been forecast by anyone who has noted the color of her hair.

"If just one more of those dressed-up rowdies looks at me in that awful way," she stormed inwardly, "I—I'll surely scratch him."

Now, of course, Edna might have turned the first corner and gotten off Broadway altogether. But she had an appointment to meet a girl from her own town at exactly five-thirty at the entrance to the building where the friend was employed. The building was on Broadway between 42d and 45th, and the friend had directed: "Walk up Broadway from 42d street." Edna knew no other route; and, besides, it was almost five-thirty. Wherefore Edna stuck to Broadway.

It was at 44th street that Edna, walking with her head high and a danger signal flashing in the tawny eyes, encountered the most persistent starer of them all. As she stepped from the crosswalk to the curb the girl's progress was fairly blocked by a young man, who not only stood stock still and devoured her with his eyes, but who actually had the temerity to speak to her.

"Beg pardon," he said, "but I'm very sure that you and I are old friends."

Trembling with indignation, Edna tried to avoid the fellow by stepping around him and hurrying on almost at a run. But the man was not to be shaken off. He was at her side in an instant. "Really," he exclaimed, "you're making a mistake, I think! Aren't you—"

She stopped in her tracks. "I won't have you speaking to me," she blazed. "If you don't go away I shall call a policeman!"

Two or three men in the crowd, looking curiously at the pair as they momentarily impeded the stream of sidewalk traffic, showed signs of stopping and taking in the show. In another moment there would be a crowd. Edna's temper was at the point where she would have welcomed it—and the inevitable policeman. The young man faced an emergency. But instead of slinking off, he met it by seizing the girl's hand, tucking it under his elbow and speaking very rapidly but distinctly into her ear: "If you're not Edna Stearns, I'm in wrong; dead wrong! If you are, I'm in the biggest luck of my life. I'm Bob Fellows!"

"Oh, my goodness!" cried Edna. "Hurry! Let's get out of this, quick!"

You see, along about the beginning of the war, when the boys were starting overseas, the particular boy who belonged to Edna's girl chum had mentioned in a letter that his bunkie had no sweater and no mother or sister or sweetheart to make him one. And the chum had read the letter to Edna. And Edna had knitted a sweater and sent it to the bunkie. That's how it started. And through the correspondence that followed Edna and the soldier had become wonderful friends. Such fine, frank, manly letters the boy had written; and toward the last such intimate, hopeful ones, that seemed to take it for granted that when the war was over they were to be very, very dear friends indeed. Then he had gone across. Edna had one letter after that telling that he had been sent to the motor transport service, and then silence. Months later the name of Robert Allison Fellows, "degree undetermined," appeared in the list of wounded. But Edna could learn nothing more. Somehow she never believed that the boy had died. He had just forgotten her, she sadly concluded, over there in all that excitement and stress. Perhaps that, together with the fact that she did not get along well with her stepmother, helped to bring on the discontent that brought her to New York.

It was over one of those belated tea-room lunches that with so many New Yorkers serve for dinner that it all came out.

"I had awful luck," Bob explained. "First thing, my company's clerk made a mistake in the transport unit I had been sent to, and I never got any mail. And the very first time I had to drive up to the lines a high explosive shell tore my truck to pieces and I went to the hospital for two months. You've heard of shell shock. Generally it's a fake. But besides my broken arm and leg I got a dose of that fool thing. The way it affected me I couldn't remember lots of things that I'd always known. And one of the things was the name of your town. I tried and tried, but I couldn't. And it never did come back to me till about six months ago. Then I wrote and didn't get any answer. After a long time the letter came back, marked 'Not at.'"

"My stepmother!" exclaimed Edna.

"Exactly. And when I got back I went up there, and she pretended she didn't know your address. Neither did anybody else I could find; only they said you were in New York. And I've been hanging around here for three solid weeks, just on the chance of finding you."

"Bob!"

"Surest thing. I was certain I'd know you from your picture. I never thought about your never having seen me except in a snapshot in uniform and a fool grin. But now I've got you—and, by jinks! you don't get away."

"Well, you needn't be so fierce about it," said Edna; "nobody wants to."

A TOBACCO BABY

A pastor in a small village in Ohio told us of one of his members who had a small baby smoker; before the child was six months old it manifested an appetite for tobacco, and the father's old corn-cob pipe was the only thing that would keep the child quiet; the parents thinking any pipe would satisfy the child, made a corn-cob pipe just like the father had used; but when the baby put it in its mouth and there was no taste and no smell like the one the father used, it would throw it away and cry; whenever the father came into the house with the pipe in his mouth the baby could not be amused with anything but the old stinky pipe; leaving all its other playthings and toys, it would cry until the father gave it the pipe he was smoking; as soon as the child was old enough to get out on the street it picked up all kinds of scraps of tobacco, chewing them ravenously. The father and mother of the child both smoked and chewed tobacco.

HANNAH MANAGES

By DORA MOLLAN

(©, 1930, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The good fairy who was among those present at the birth of Hannah Hempstead brought a most excellent and valuable gift; but being a generous fairy and fearful of stinting, perhaps she brought a bit too much of it. For as an overdose of some drugs causes an effect opposite to the one sought, so Hannah's extraordinary orderliness of nature brought her more enemies than friends.

Hannah never hid the light of her gift under a bushel. She didn't stop with putting in meticulous order all her inanimate surroundings, but ventured boldly into the perilous enterprise of straightening out the affairs of the humans of her community whenever she decided that they needed it. She never went out of doors that she didn't itch to set upright every crooked tree.

There was one person in the regulation of whose life Hannah had a perfect score. The days of her younger sister had been ordered in strict accord to the senior's ideas. Perhaps though, she had taken an unfair advantage, for there were eighteen years to her credit when Harmonie was born and to Hannah alone was left the task of bringing up the baby sister.

An August sun beat down upon four cords of wood stacked neatly at the side of the Hempstead barn. It was a sight to delight the eye of almost any housekeeper; but to Hannah Hempstead it meant an unsolved problem thrust upon her by the hand of death. Jed Henry shouldn't have been allowed to depart this life until he had carried out his yearly contract, driven his portable power saw into the Hempstead yard and reduced that four-foot wood into convenient stove lengths! At this point Hannah, gazing out at the wood from the cool shelter of the kitchen, suddenly realized that her thoughts were verging on a criticism of the Almighty. Only the Sunday before the new minister had said something on that subject.

Hannah Was Deliberately "Working" Mr. Dunston.

"The new minister!" Hannah spoke the words aloud.

Harmonie, who had entered the house unnoticed by the elder sister, paused in the doorway. Well she knew what Hannah's present facial expression portended.

"Whose affairs are to be straightened out now?" No one but Harmonie would have dared to take a like liberty with Hannah.

"Our own," was the terse answer. Then the elder woman bustled into the dining room. "We'll clean the solid silver this afternoon," she announced.

"Heavens! Why do anything unnecessary this weather?" But five minutes later Harmonie's curly blonde head and friendly blue eyes were bent over the silver. She offered no further [illegible]

Three days later Hannah told Harmonie she had invited the new minister to tea the next afternoon. Harmonie, who had joined reluctantly in the orgy of work which always preceded the arrival of a guest in their house, had suspected since the day of the cleaning of the silver that Hannah had plans afoot which concerned the minister. What could she want of him? Mr. Dunston was a bachelor of forty but he looked about thirty; Hannah, though she was but thirty-eight, looked forty-five. Harmonie put a certain possibility out of her mind altogether.

After Harmonie had listened demurely half-way through the conversation at the "high tea" it began to dawn on her that Hannah was deliberately "working" Mr. Dunston to take the place of the inconsiderate Jed Henry's sawmill. There was mention of the minister's already celebrated love of strenuous exercise; of the scarcity of labor in the community; of the latest fad among outdoors rich men for chopping wood—and of the Hempstead woodpile. The Reverend Mr. Dunston seemed to fairly jump at the bait. And Harmonie, disgusted that Hannah should show so little proper pride, resolved right then and there to lighten his labors as much as she possibly [illegible].

The neighbor sniffed, Hannah beamed and Harmonie helped stack up the stove lengths. The Rev. Mr. Dunston seemed to enjoy both the exercise and the companionship of the younger Hempstead sister; also the apple pie or fragrant spice cake which Hannah usually produced. Harmonie was not the type of girl to whom an older man instinctively appeals. Nevertheless she grew to like Mr. Dunston more and more; until all at once the suspicion took root in her mind that it was Hannah's plan that she should do that very thing. The thought turned her squarely against the minister; for Harmonie had long ago resolved that when it came to the one really important event of her life, Sister Hannah for once should have nothing whatever to say about it.

Harmonie was in this frame of mind when Hannah one day informed her that the Rev. Mr. Dunston had asked if he might see her privately. "From several things he has said," she volunteered, "I have every reason to believe he means to propose to me."

Harmonie stared at her sister in amazement. "Propose—to you!"

"Why not?" Hannah's tone challenged all criticism. "He's tired of boarding and he won't hear of putting the old minister out of the parsonage. He likes my cooking—and we need a man in the house. It's a mighty good arrangement all around."

Without a word Harmonie walked out of the house and around behind the woodpile. There, in the shade and out of sight she began to reconstruct her world. Mr. Dunston was just a—just a flirt, then; for certainly he had given her to understand that he—well, that he liked her. Hannah was a designing female. As for her, Harmonie, nobody loved her; nobody cared anything about her. Of course she must go away. She would go now—go right in to the house this minute and pack. And because she was mentally composing a letter to be left behind for Hannah, she failed to hear approaching footsteps; and all at once there was Mr. Dunston standing before her.

"Harmonie," he said. "I have just received your sister's permission to say something to you. Will you be my wife? I know I'm much older than you, but I love you—and love needs no apologist."

In the sudden reaction from woe to joy Harmonie began to cry. Philip Dunston's athletic arm drew her to him and the girl's face was hidden on his shoulder.

As they walked back to the house some moments later, hand in hand, a thought came suddenly to Harmonie. It was of Hannah. "Wait," she commanded, and hurried into the house. Hannah was setting forth spice cakes and tea.

Gently, lovingly, Harmonie laid her hand on her sister's arm. "I'm sorry Hannah," she said, "it happened this way."

"You needn't be," replied Hannah briskly; "it has come out just as I planned. Sometimes a little opposition helps things along a whole lot."

MOTHER

The mother of the Rev. John Newton, a pious woman who lived in the south of England, died when he was only seven years old; leaving him only the memory of her religious teachings and goodness. At an early age he became a dissipated sailor, and drifted far away from every thing that was taught him by his sainted mother. But later in life the memory of her religious teachings and goodness brought him to himself and to his mother's Christ; which started a stream of righteous influence that is still bearing fruit for Christ. Through his Christian life Claudius Birchman was converted and afterward went as a missionary to India. Birchman wrote the "Star in the East" which turned the attention of Adoniram Judson toward India, and he too became a missionary to that land. Newton was also the means of converting Thomas Scott, the commentator, and through his influence Cowper was rescued from his despondency, and his harp tuned to the key of religion; his influence upon the career of Wilberforce is asserted and the abolition of the slave trade was also one of the remote results. Wilberforce wrote a "Practical View of Christianity" a useful book which was instrumental in the conversion of Leigh Richmond, the author of the "Dairyman's Daughter" which has proved such an inspiration to thousands; and back of all this stands the faithful mother of John Newton who gave her best love and Christian influence to her little boy up to the age of seven years. The mothers of America alone may win this nation to Jesus Christ and do it in a generation, by giving the boys and girls their mother love and influence sanctified by the Spirit of Jesus Christ. Mother, will your boy or girl in later years testify to your devotion to Christ? will they walk through the years after you have gone to your reward and praise and bless the memory of your holy living and influence? Think.

—Christian Worker.

Mock Crab.—Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter, add one-half cupful of flour, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of salt, three-fourths teaspoonful of mustard, one-fourth teaspoonful of paprika. When well blended pour gradually while stirring constantly one and one-half cupfuls of scalded milk. Bring to the boiling point and add one can of kornlet, one egg lightly beaten, three teaspoonfuls of Worcestershire sauce. Turn into a buttered dish, cover with a cupful of buttered crumbs and bake until brown.

Head Lettuce With Pears.—A most attractive and appetizing salad is this: Arrange the crisp heart leaves of lettuce on the salad plates and fill each nest with eighths of carefully peeled pears. A few strips of red pepper placed over them as a garnish adds to the appearance, but paprika may be used, sprinkled over the dressing. If French dressing is used, add a bit of onion and a dash of cayenne.

Prince of Wales Cake.—Dark part—Cream one half cupful of butter, add one cupful of molasses, one-half cupful of strong coffee, sift one teaspoonful each of soda, nutmeg, cinnamon, cloves, with two cupfuls of flour. Add three well beaten egg yolks and one cupful of raisins.

Light part—Cream one-half cup of butter, add one cupful of sugar gradually. Mix and sift together one cupful of flour with one-half cupful of cornstarch and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder; add the dry ingredients alternately with one-half cupful of milk. Cut and fold in the whites of three eggs beaten stiff. Bake in layers. Alternate a dark with white layer when putting together.

Luncheon Dessert.—Pour lemon jelly over orange sections, banana, pineapple and grapefruit. When molded serve with cream.

Fig or Date Pudding.—Beat one egg, separating the yolk and white, one-half cupful of milk, six tablespoonfuls of ice water, one-third of a cup of butter, one cupful of flour, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half pound of figs or dates, two tablespoonfuls of molasses. Cream the butter, which may be a butter substitute; add the egg yolk, molasses, part of the flour, ice water, remainder of flour with the baking powder, well sifted. Add the figs or dates which have been cut in bits and rolled in flour; lastly the white of egg beaten stiff with a pinch of salt.

Beat one egg, add one-half cup of sugar and half-cup of hot milk with Philadelphia Butter Buns.—Make a sponge of one cake of compressed yeast, one-fourth of a cupful of water, one cupful of scalded milk and one and one-half cupfuls of bread flour. When light add one-fourth cupful of butter, melted, two egg yolks, one-half teaspoonful of salt, the grated rind of a lemon and about two cupfuls of flour. Knead until smooth and elastic. Cover close and set aside to double in bulk. Turn upside down on a board, roll into a rectangular sheet, spread with softened butter, dredge with sugar and cinnamon and sprinkle with currants and roll as a jelly roll. Cut into inch pieces an inch and a quarter long. This amount will make 18 buns. Butter the pan in which they are to be baked, dredge well with brown sugar and place the buns. When light, bake carefully not to burn on the bottom. The sugar and butter should glaze the bottom of the buns. Three or four tablespoonfuls of butter and half a cup of brown sugar will be needed for the bottom of the pan

JOY OF GRATITUDE

To the lover of life, who seeks happiness by a natural and inevitable law that is in no wise contrary to the will of God, there are certain joys of a surpassing sweetness. Among these is the joy of gratitude, which is one of the most exalting and transporting emotions of the soul. One has but to read the book of Psalms to appreciate the refined joy that may come to the soul of man through gratitude. What raptures thrilled the soul of the Psalmist as he reviewed the divine blessings! In like manner, though no doubt in lesser degree, all of us may taste this enrapturing sweetness of gratitude. To be thankful as his blessings deserve, is one of the rarest joys of the soul that appreciates God's goodness and responds to it. It is twice

COST OF LIVING IN 1846

Record Kept by College Youth Shows It Was What We Would Now Consider Small.

A page from an old diary written in 1846 gives some illuminating items about the cost of living. The diary was written by Dr. Elmer Evan Edwards, the first president of the Colorado Agricultural college, and covers a period of thirty-two years. It is a recent gift to the college library.

In the fall of 1846, Dr. Edwards was just entering Asbury college now De Pauw university, as a preparatory student. He gives his expenses for his first week, including travel from Roseville as $10.14. His comment on this large sum is: "This makes my expenses for food, fuel, lights, etc., about 50 cents a week. Good board can be had from $1 to $2 a week."

The diary shows that Dr. Edwards was living with two other boys under the arrangement that is sometimes called "batching." Some of the items are. "Rent, $1.50 a month; my share, 50 [illegible]. Desk, tall one reaching to chin, 75 cents. Hauling load of straw for bed, 15 cents. Lodging one night at hotel in Crawford, 37 cents. Flour: 1 bbl. $5; my share $1. The largest item is the initiation fee into the Plato society $2, the smallest is for one pound of candles at 12 cents.

The diary illustrated with either pen or pencil sketches gives an entertaining account of the college life of a lively boy of the last century. One of Dr. Edwards' classmates was John R. Tarkington, the father of Booth Tarkington.

THINK TOO LITTLE OF HEALTH

Majority of People Take No Precautions to Avoid the Attacks of Disease, Until Too Late.

There are a number of more or less scientific [illegible] on the subject of health. The first, followed by perhaps most people, is to give no thought to the preservation of health or avoidance of disease and if trouble arises to [illegible] to drugs or call the doctor. This is a very careless attitude. The second is to be very careful to try to avoid disease but pay no attention to the cultivation of general health. This is only half scientific. The third method is to cultivate general health on the [illegible] that disease cannot attack a healthy body and accordingly to pay little attention to avoidance of disease. This is better than the first two attitudes but is not sufficient, for vigorous people are not always immune to infectious diseases. Indeed, [illegible] diseases, such as typhoid and [illegible]cosis, make their most virulent attacks on the strong and healthy. The fourth and best attitude is a combination of the foregoing. One should seek to promote the very best condition of general health and take all reasonable precautions against disease. Then if disease does come in spite of all, a doctor should be consulted and, if need be, drugs may be used to help remove obstacles in the way of nature or tide the person over a crisis. Drugs should never be depended on as a cure or for habitual stimulus.

TWICE WON, IS WON

By DWIGHT TINGLE SCOTT

(Ch. 1915, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Sid McLaren was a benign idiot. That is a conclusion not lightly arrived at. To appreciate the breadth of his imbecility you would have had to know him in the days when he was Old Man Parsons' drug clerk; you would have had to pull him out some morning at two o'clock to fill the baby's croup prescription; or to contemplate his homely but expansive smile as he waited upon the three-deep row of people who would line up for a nut sundae after the last performance at the Orpheum; or to see him stowing old Aunt Pliny Flaccus and a dozen bundles into the Berryville hack, which at four promptly each afternoon took its rickety departure from in front of Parsons' apothecary shop.

And to sound the depths of his idiocy you would have to know all the circumstances that led to his "up and leaving" just as Old Man Parsons was about to turn the business over to him and make him the chief beneficiary in a will. And by rights you should also know the girl in the case—but sounds!—and likewise Mad Tom Ashes—we can't go into that now.

For the editor of this paper has decided views about modern fiction, and if you can't uphold virtue, expose subterfuge, foil the villain and marry off the heroine all in the compass of twelve hundred words you have got to look for another market. That eliminates Sid's past. I know he was a benign idiot. You have got to take this upon faith. So let's go.

Between the Larraby house and Simpson's theater—and this has nothing to do with the town which Sid had left nor the girl—between the hotel and the theater is a passageway. It is wider than those passageways down which wash water and offending smells come. It is not so wide as an alley.

A popcorn man has built a stand which makes it blind on the Main street end, but it is open to Woodlawn avenue. Between the bare fire walls the patch of sky above looks uncommon blue, and of an afternoon it is cool and damp and quiet there. There is a single side door into the hotel and a small stage entrance across from it.

To make a short cut, drummers sometimes come in that way at noon and bid faithful Fridays park their sample-laden pushcarts there. And when, as is frequently the case, a theatrical production finds its drops and mechanical effects too elaborate for Simpson's stage, they store scenery in this passageway. So usually it is cluttered up like the sidewalk in front of a Harlem flat building on the first of October.

Sid McLaren came out this little door and glanced about like a man seeking air. Inside the boys were lounging about and smoking and talking. When the clerk handed him the letter he looked knowingly at Sid. At least it seemed so to Sid, so he took his letter and finding some one in the writing room finally landed on a packing case in the far end of the passageway—a sort of hidden solitude which such a letter seemed to demand.

For Sid had been expecting just the letter. Now that it had really come, the contents—well, one never can quite anticipate despair or elation.

Sid read the letter through, turned it over, gazed at the blank reverse side, turned it back and reread the last sentence: "Despite our patience you have not been able to develop sufficient business to justify our continuing your employment. We regret that we will have to ask you to come in at the end of the week."

Rapt in the contemplation of his own problem, young McLaren did not hear the conversation which floated out from the door at the other side of the passageway:

"The hussy-cat. So that was why she has been hanging around the wings when Frieda was on. But they wouldn't dare, Marjorie. Tucker wouldn't do a dirty trick like that, mean as he is—"

"It is already done. Here's the notice. Tucker signed it." The quiet tones of the last speaker were in contrast to the passionate, strained voice of the other girl.

"Here comes old Tuck now; I'm gonna ask him. Mr. Tucker, is it true Mrs. Hansel has been understudying Frieda and is going to take the part tonight?"

"You mind yer own business." The man turned his back and addressed the other girl. "I'm sorry, Marjorie, honest I am, but it's Hardy's orders. He's been sour on you ever since you wouldn't go on that party."

She was tall, with dark chestnut hair and a straight, firm profile. Only a slight glisten in the big, gray eyes told the half-dozen girls hanging in the wings that her steady voice was only a bit of stage business.

"It's all right, Mr. Tucker—it's all right—it's Hardy's show. Then I'll not need to stay for the understudy's rehearsal?"

"Listen, girlie, I am sorry, and if I was you, and you'll take an old-timer's advice—"

But the girl's head had gone up and proudly she had walked away.

Presently Sid McLaren became aware that his solitude had been intruded upon. Beyond a pile of trunks some one was sobbing softly, but with earnest abandon.

Cautiously Sid pushed his face up until he could command the other side of the pile. Though Marjorie Blain was the tall Diana of the third act, curled upon an imitation flight of marble stairs, her head pillowed in the cradle of her arm, she seemed to big Sid a very little and very pathetic figure.

"Oh, I say," he said, crawling down beside her, "I wouldn't do that. I don't know what it is all about, but it really can't be so bad. You know nothing is as bad as you think it is going to be, nor so good, either, for that matter."

The sobbing continued unabated. From anybody else it would have been audacity. But with Sid it came simply and naturally as going out and helping Aunt Pliny Flaccus into the hack. The girl didn't even start nor look when his hand began to pat her shoulder awkwardly.

"Tell us about it. Maybe it's good luck and you haven't discovered it yet—you know I've just had a little jolt handed to me myself, but pshaw! everything always comes out all right if you give it a chance."

"But—but I had worked so hard—and—and now it has all fizzered. I guess Hardy was right. I got out of the country, but I couldn't get the country out of me. I didn't seem to catch on, somehow—I didn't belong."

Then suddenly she found herself

Deaths

Mrs. Margaret Davis died Wednesday night, April 14, at the home of her daughter, 147 S. Sandusky St. Funeral services at Welsh church, by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Mr. Lynn Owen, a former Hilltop resident, died at Tuscon, N. M., Wednesday, April 14. The remains were shipped here where the funeral services were conducted on Monday, Westgate Lodge, K. of P. having charge. Burial in Sunbury, Ohio, by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Mrs. Crego, wife of W. W. Crego, 272 Whitethorne Ave., died Friday, April 16th. The funeral was conducted by Rev. F. E. White assisted by Rev. C. F. Bowman on Monday at 1 o'clock. Burial in Thurston, Ohio

A tribute from J. R. B. class of Glenwood M. E. church to one we have known long and loved much, Mrs. Zoe Williams Crego, who was called to her heavenly home Friday, April 16th.

It is with heartfelt grief we attempt to express our sympathy, for mere words cannot convey our admiration and love for Zoe. Again words fail to express our keen grief that one so young should be taken from a beautiful home and a kind loving husband. The same sympathetic thought goes out to father, mother, brother and sister.

Many friends are grieving over the loss of one so beautiful in character and loving in disposition. Not only personal friends but all who have known her in her work as Sunday School teacher, superintendent of the Cradle Roll and in other departments of the church will keenly miss Zoe's kindly words and smiling face.

May the little daughter that she has left live to be a constant reminder of the mother who sacrificed life that she might live. We hope that God in His Providence will spare the life of this little one and our faith is that as she grows into womanhood there will be manifest in her the same beautiful characteristics that endeared Zoe to the hearts of all.

INEZ M. GOOLEY,
MRS. R. F. BUSCHER,
BINA A. MARTIN,
EMMA COX MYERS,
EDITH C. WILLIAMSON.

Expressions of sympathy from the Glenwood Sunday School:

When one who is aged dies, it is a sheaf of wheat, ripe, ready to be garnered. When a little child is taken it is a bud called to bloom in the garden of God. But sometimes God comes and plucks one of our fairest, one of our most beautiful, one who is just entering into her most wonderful heritage of womanhood, and motherhood, and it is, it MUST be, as if God needs some rare and glorious flower to make his garden more resplendent.

And so, while our tears mingle today with those of all who loved our "Zoe" we may joy in knowing that she is in the presence of Him, whom she loved and worshipped.

Mrs. Crego served as Superintendent of the Cradle Roll of our Glenwood School for eleven years. The children, who were brought into the school through her influence, loved her dearly.

In her work as Superintendent, she showed unusual qualities. She was cultured, affectionate, capable, untiring, quick to plan, ready to execute. Her life was given to Christ and the Church in beautiful faith and devotion. Added to her beauty of person, and the exquisite charm of being thoroughly feminine, was her cheerfulness, her vivacity, her tactfulness. There was that SOMETHING about her life, which won all hearts. And then, too, the sunshine of her smile. Who could have resisted it?

"We all must answer when but God decrees. Her call has come. Is this the end? 'Tis but the BEGINNING. In her rich faith, no doubts were hers, no fears. Adown the swiftly moving tide of years, she came triumphant through all work and play, spreading love and cheer along her happy way. Hers was the creed of love. Hers was a faith from above, and though in grief each one doth bow his head, we know her spirit LIVES, she is NOT DEAD."

Dear One, Farewell. While the birds are singing their sweetest melodies, and all nature is budding into growth and bloom, we lay her dear body away among the flowers she has always loved.

God grant that her loving influence may ever be felt in our Glenwood Sunday School, as it has so long been felt in the past. And, as the years come and go over her grave; Ah, "Warm summer sun, shine kindly here, warm southern wind, blow softly here; green sod above, lie light, lie light."

Good night, Dear Heart, Good night, Good night.

M. W. Legg, C. W. Walton, Abbie M. Chenoweth, Committee.

The Tri Mu class of Glenwood church is an organized class. A bunch of young men comprise the membership of this class. Most of its members are Hilltop fellows ranging in age from 17 to 25 years. This Tri Mu class was organized in June 1918 with seven men as charter members. Steadily the class has grown until the attendance has been for one single Sunday 139 present and accounted for. Giving to the service of Uncle Sam 135 ambitious soldiers, sailors and marines. Out of the number sent to war only six gave the supreme sacrifice. A record in itself one should be proud to think on. To perpetuate the memory of the soldiers of Glenwood church a Soldier's Memorial was published on Dec. 15, 1919. A splendid 128 page book with war stories, pictures, snap shots and a photograph of every soldier who served. This year the attendance has been very good and still growing. On Easter Sunday the attendance touched a new mark there being 59 out that day. Many new members have come into the class and still they come. Why not keep up the good work of this bunch and let the name of Tri Mu live. It is an inspiration to see a healthy bunch of young men attending Sunday school.

The Straphanger

Spring comes on so slowly that we fear we will not know when to greet it.

We never appreciate a strap so much as when we surrender our seat to one who is old or infirm or needs it so much more than we.

If men should "strike" for more hours with the same rate, they would increase their income and production at the same time.

How about a "hunger strike" to bring down old H. C. L.? No one wants to join us.

Now since we wear "overalls" let's join the real "producers" class.

Since men only work eight hours daily why not run out to the country in your "flivver" and help the farmer about three hours this spring and summer. It will help to keep some one from going hungry next winter.

Glad Old Si Oto didn't get unruly this time. Maybe the worst he could get was Near Beer.

We feel sure now that the bridges will be finished without further interruptions. We are to be congratulated for having "come through" so well.

The river looks bad now but draw upon your imagination how it will look when the work is done and VICTORY PARK is a reality.

Hail! Hail! the gang's all here! So with cake, and cup, and spoon, marched right on into the home of Mrs. Daniel Jerman, 47 Clarendon Ave. Thus did the Ladies' Aid Society of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church on Friday evening, April 16th. Neither did the inclemency of the weather cool their ardor for "All went merry as a marriage bell."

As soon as Mrs. Jerman had "sufficiently recovered" the "party" proceeded to "get busy" with games of contest, conducted by Mrs. C. C. Cook, assisted by Mrs. P. G. Gantz. The winners of favors were: Mesdames Jerman, Wowell, Cooley and Hughes.

Refreshments consisting of home baked cake, Neopolitan ice cream, and coffee were served and the "party" bade the hostess good night.

Those present were: Mrs. Jerman and daughter, Angeline; Mrs. C. C. Cook, Mrs. P. G. Gantz, Mrs. Matson, Mrs. Hill, Mrs. T. A. Jones, Mrs. Oyler, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Cooley, Mrs. Burton Bretz, Mrs. W. C. Ault, Mrs. Walters, Mrs. Bainter, Mrs. McKinley, Mrs. Wowell, Mrs. Guy Ault, Mrs. W. D. Hughes, Mrs. Palmer, Mrs. O. B. Jones, Mrs. Deems, Mrs. Sperry. Quite a number were absent because of illness.

Friday night, April 23 at 6:00 p. m. a supper will be given all canvassers of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church to arrange the details of The Every Member Canvass to be made Sunday afternoon, April 25.

Any one having used clothing and shoes that they would give for the Rummage Sale for the benefit of the South Side settlement leave or phone Mrs. Glick, 62 S. Warren and Mrs. Eldon Smith, 2488 W. Broad St.

In the year of 1861 the war was begun down at Fort Sumpter, with Major Anderson, who stood by the flag with heart brave and true, and fought like a man for the red, white and blue.

On Saturday, April 15, 1861 President Lincoln called for seventy-five thousand men and some ninety thousand responded to the call immediately. (We did not wait for Congress to get out a draft law.) Columbus at that time had three companies, Governors Guards, State Fencibles and Columbus Vedettes. All three companies enlisted. Governors Guards were assigned to the 3rd Ohio, State Fencibles to Co. C, 2nd Ohio, and the Columbus to 2nd Ohio, Co. B. On Saturday the 15th of April Captain Henry Thrall of the Vedettes Company was up in the State Auditor's office when the call came in. He went down to the Governor's office and tendered the service of the Vedette Company, which was accepted and on Monday muster in roll of Capt. Thrall, B Company in the 2nd Regiment of Ohio, V. A. by Colonel Lewis Wilson, April 17, 1861. Monday evening we marched from our drill hall, third floor on Town street (East end of the building just east of the bank building corner of Town and High, still standing) and marched up High St. to Goodale Park. Was there a very short time, marched down to the depot took train for the East Tuesday morning, was in Altoona, Pa. very early, but the young ladies and lots of others were at the siding with pies, cakes and lots of good things to eat. Our train pulled out for Lancaster, Pa., stopped there a few days and then to Harrisburg a few days, then to Philadelphia for a few days but don't remember the date, but in the morning early we were ordered out and ordered to load. Our cartridge was composed of powder, one round ounce ball, and 3 buck shot laying on top the ball. The cap nipel was some distance in front of the britch pin and when we pulled the trigger we knew to a certainty that the cartridge left the gun, for that old gun stalk sometimes would come back against us.

We boarded the train for Washington, going through old Baltimore after the 6th Masse was attacked. They were not prepared for and did not expect to have any trouble. We got through without any trouble, landed in Washington, was there a few days. Marched across the long bridge, went into camp, drilled and did picket duty. Worked our way out to Centerville, was there a few days and on the evening of July 20th took up our march for the Stone Bridge, Bull Run. Arrived close to the Bridge Sunday morning the 21st of July. We had one large gun just in front of our Regiment that we sent some balls over to the Johnnies but they did not answer back, so our brigade went back on the Warrentown pike and went through a path in the woods (Shenks Brigade) Company A, 1st Ohio filed left of this path. The nine companies of the 1st Ohio, the ten companies of the 2nd and the 2nd New York Regiment. Still on this path, which was straight as a string, when the crack of a cannon was heard. Our Captain Thrall loud and sharp commanded "down boys." Down we went the whole brigade. We laid under that fire 2½ hours and went back to the Warrentown pike in front of the Sone Bridge. Our brigade supported our artillery all day and in the evening we were rear guard back to camp Upton. No breaks in our ranks till we reached Fairfax Court House. Some of the boys kept to the road to Old Camp, when we came to the O. & R. railroad we went down the railroad to camp, arriving there at noon Monday. In the evening [illegible] were at the Potomac River and was taken across on ferry boats; taken to a hall and had issued to us pineapple, cheese, bread and ham. Marched to the arsenal turned over our guns and equipments and in a few days were on the road home, having served over time about half a month for which Uncle Sam paid us at the rate of $13.00 per month. Our first pay was just before the start to R. R. which we received, one twenty dollar gold piece, one ten dollar gold piece, one dollar in silver, one half dollar in silver and one dime silver, all brand new.

The oldest boy in the Company was 35 years and the youngest 18 years, three of the company living, John Vausch, 31 years, Wilson Ave.; Geo. Ogden, 19 years, Fourth St. and Jno. Walton, 23 years, 59 N. Terrace St. I have a copy of the Bull Run roll, all named, rank and ages at time of enlistment.

I was the shortest kid in the Company and the last name on the roll and the officers nicknamed me the least and last. If you want some more I have it, 26, 63, 64 and 65 Andersonville prisoner.

HIGHLAND AVE. FRIENDS

Regular preaching services at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

Revival meetings begin here Sunday March 2nd. We are expecting a time of blessing and refreshing. Plan to attend.

ST. PAUL UNITED EVANGELICAL

Owing to the dedication of the new United Evangelical church in North Columbus on Weber Road, Sunday, there will be no preaching services Sunday morning or evening at the St. Paul United Evangelical church.

We will meet at the church at 8 o'clock to go in a body. Sunday school will be held at 9:30 a. m. for those who cannot attend the dedication. Dinner and supper will be furnished free to all who attend the dedication of the new church.

Bishop W. F. Hill will preach at 10:30 a. m. and will dedicate the new church at 7:30 p. m. You are invited to attend thy service.

HILL CREST BAPTIST CHURCH

Morning worship 10:30, "The Greatest Hour in Baptist History." B. Y. P. U. at 6:30.

Evening preaching, "Eventually Why Not Now?" Special music by a fine ladies chorus.

The New World Movement.—Northern Baptists in the next four years are going to raise $100,000,000 for their work home and abroad. This is the largest amount any denomination has ever attempted.

Hill Crest church will raise $15,000 for the next four years. This is a wonderful task for a small church but when the church is right spiritually and every member realizes his stewardship the thing is easy.

Members are urged to stay at home on Sunday afternoon as the entire church membership will be canvassed then. No Baptist loving can afford to be out of this greatest movement for God and a lost world since the birth of Christ. Watch Hill Crest go over the top.

The supper for the teams will be on Friday night instead of Thursday. Team members will please be there without fail.

3:30 B. Y. P. U. Marion Long, leader.

HILLTOP CHURCH OF CHRIST

Communion 10:30 a. m. Sermon, "Two Lives Contrasted," P. m. sermon, "Jesus and Social Problems."

THE HILLTOP EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH

On Wednesday evening April 28th two Commissioners sent to Europe by the National Lutheran Council to investigate conditions there will speak in the First English Lutheran church, corner Main and 22nd Sts. It will be a wonderful privilege to hear these men. Everyone should avail himself of this opportunity to get first hand information.

St. John Lutheran

Services on Sunday at 10:30 and 7:30. Morning topic, "Sorrow Turned Into Joy."

Evening topic, "The Jailer's Question, Let It Be Ours."

HOGE MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

10:30 morning worship and sermon, "Wanted—Lives."

Children's sermon, "Don't Touch Life's Hair Spring."

7:30 p. m. "The Christian Imperative."

There will be a duet by Earl Bradfute and Paul Frederick at Hoge Memorial Sunday School next Sunday. Come out and hear them.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST CHURCH

Dr. G. R. Robbins will preach Sunday morning on this theme: "Waving Our Banners In the Name of God and the Great Baptist Denomination."

Evening, "The Three Crosses on Calvary." Baptism. Surely signs and wonders take place in this church akin to those in the Apostolic church. Miracles of healing. All the money quickly comes as when the apostles gave themselves to prayer and the people willingly offered themselves and their money. Over nine thousand will be subscribed this coming Sunday for missions alone. If you are tired and worn and sick come and kneel at the altar and see if the Lord will not heal you of all your diseases.

WHEN CONOVER CONNED.

By CORONA REMINGTON.

(©, 1916, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Well, young man!" said Brockton absently as he took his gaze off a pile of letters that were lying on the desk in front of him. "Why, hello there! It's Conover. Glad to see you." Brockton shook his visitor's hand warmly as he offered him a seat.

"Yes," was all that Conover could think to say as he dropped into the chair like a piece of lead.

The older man leaned back in his chair and waited, an expression of amused sympathy playing over his face.

"Mr. Brockton, I want to—I want to—" Conover stopped and tried again. "I want—I want—"

"I guess I know what it's about," said Brockton kindly, his blue eyes twinkling. "I had to do the same thing myself once, and I haven't forgotten it yet. It's about Doris, isn't it?"

"Yes," he answered quickly as he glanced gratefully at his prospective father-in-law.

"I thought so. How are you fixed about supporting a wife?"

"Of course, Mr. Brockton, I couldn't keep Doris in the luxury to which she is accustomed—that is, not at present—but I believe I could make her comfortable. I'd certainly do everything in my power, anyhow."

"That's right, young man, and I believe you'd do it. I know there's nothing stingy about you, and, I'm glad to see it. If there's one incurable sin among mortals, it's stinginess—I never heard of anyone getting over it."

"No, sir, I don't think I'm stingy, and I feel sure we'd be very happy together."

"Take her, then, my boy," said Brockton, gently.

A few minutes later Conover left the office of L. B. Brockton, attorney, on winged feet. He stopped at a florist's shop and blew in on a most gorgeous bouquet of American Beauties, then recklessly hailed a passing taxi and went speeding toward the Brockton home.

Somewhere far back in the recesses of his mind he realized dimly that three boxes of flowers, two evenings at the theater, with supper afterward, and a few taxis thrown in, made rather an expensive week for a man on a salary, but, after all, weren't they for Doris? And who could spend too much on such a girl? His thoughts were suddenly interrupted by the taxi coming to a standstill in front of the Brockton home.

"Your father's a regular trump!" he told his sweetheart exultantly as soon as he had entered the drawing room.

"What did he say?" came in muffled tones from the region of his coat front.

"He said I could have you; so you only have to name the day. Let's do it tomorrow," he pleaded.

"How absurd, you old dear. Just think about all my trousseau to make yet, and the announcements and things."

For nearly three hours they were totally engrossed planning the rosy future, but at last Conover had to pull himself away.

"When can I see you again?" he asked, as he rose to leave.

"This is Saturday," she mused.

"Let me take you to church tomorrow morning," he begged. "You know I haven't been with you to Trinity yet."

"Not in the morning," she answered, "but we could go to the evening service."

"Good! Then let's go to Foster's afterward."

"All right," Doris smilingly agreed.

There remained nothing for Conover to do but wait until the evening of the next day, and a long, long wait it was. He began dressing at a little after five o'clock, and found himself ready ages too soon, in spite of the fact that he tried on every silk shirt and necktie he possessed. At last, being unable to keep still any longer he decided to start out and walk to Doris' home; it was only about four miles, and walking would be better than having to sit down and wait in that confounded club, where no one could understand what it was like to be engaged to the most wonderful and beautiful girl in the world. His face lighted up as he put on his hat and took a last glance at himself in the mirror.

John Conover made the distance in record-breaking time, notwithstanding he had tried to go very slowly so as to avoid arriving too soon. But there is an end to the longest wait, and the appointed hour finally approached.

"I began to think all the clocks had stopped," he told Doris as he helped her on with her wrap.

"You're such an impatient boy," she smiled at him.

Notwithstanding John's eagerness to get to church he paid little attention to what the rector was saying, but kept his eyes glued on the dainty little profile beside him. Suddenly he noticed the vestrymen starting slowly from the altar carrying the collection plates. Four dreadful thoughts flashed into his consciousness simultaneously: "He and Doris were sitting in the second pew from the front and the plate would be practically empty; Mr. Brockton was taking up the collection in their section and he, John Conover, had in his pocket exactly one ten-dollar bill and one nickel. He had promised to take Doris to Foster's after the service, and, lastly, he felt the perspiration trickling down his back as he further remembered that stinginess was an incurable sin.

Wildly he plunged both hands into his pockets; his left hand gripped the ten-dollar bill, the other the nickel—which one should he draw forth and place beneath the eyes of his future father-in-law? If he put in the bill he'd be all right with the father, but how about Doris? If he put in the nickel he'd be all right with Doris, but how about the father?

Suddenly he looked down to see the almost empty plate nearly under his chin. Hysterically, he jumped, and jerking both hands out of his pockets, held them over the silver dish. His left hand opened and the ten-dollar bill dropped from his grip.

It was all over in a second.

In a frenzy he glanced down at Doris sitting demurely at his side and probably thinking about that trip to Foster's at that very instant. How was he to break the news and how would she take it? He hadn't even the fare to get her home.

When the services were over he walked down the aisle by her side like one going to his execution, realizing that each step was bringing him nearer the fatal moment. Now they were out of the church, and he had not thought of any possible escape. His lips were parched and his hands wet and clammy as he tried to speak to Doris.

"D—Doris," he began.

"Oh, there you are," a voice interrupted at his side. "I thought you'd given me the slip. Don't know what your plans are, but I was wondering whether you youngsters wouldn't come down to Foster's with me. I know three's a crowd, but she's all the family I have," Brockton explained to Conover, "and I thought maybe you'd let me have a little share tonight."

"We'd love it, daddy, dear," said Doris, slipping a hand into his.

"Nothing could make me happier," replied John with such fervency that Brockton slapped him on the back and mentally doubled the size of his wedding present.

GETTING RID OF A RIVAL.

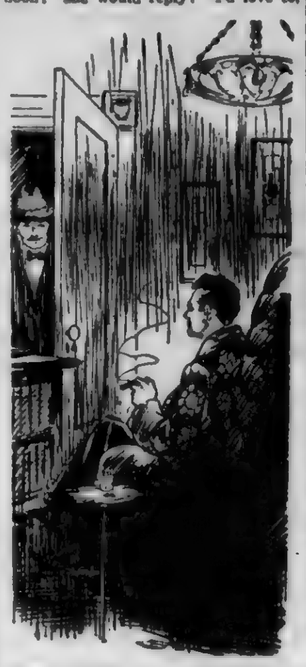
By R. RAY BAKER.

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Edmund Gallagher decided it was best to face the facts squarely. His rival had the inside track with Clarise Scott, and there was no use trying to delude himself on that score.



There was only one thing that kept Edmund from marrying Clarise—the matter of finances. In a year he would be in a position to take the final plunge, but he felt that if something were not done in the meantime to remove the rival from his path the plunge might never develop.

Edmund would not have objected to the rival if the latter had not tried to monopolize Clarise's time. He was willing that the rival should live in the same house with her and enjoy her companionship six days and three nights a week. Sunday and the other nights Edmund felt belonged to him.

The rival held the balance of power because Clarise lived in the rival's home and had a right to demand a large share of her attentions. The rival, you see, was the girl's mother.

Clarise was an only child and her father was dead. The mother was only twenty years the senior of the daughter, who was twenty, and the two had been close companions since Mr. Scott's demise four years ago. They attended theaters and various social functions together; they went shopping together, and frequently Mrs. Scott came downtown to eat lunch with Clarise, who was head bookkeeper in a department store.

It seemed that Mrs. Scott took particular delight in interfering with Edmund's plans. Often when he would call his fiancee on the telephone and ask: "How about lunch with me this noon?" she would reply: "I'd love to, but mother is coming down." When he would tell her "I'm coming up this evening," there would be an objection in the form of "I'm sorry, Ed, but you can't; mother and I are going to the Jefferson party."

Dick's Smiling Face Protruded Into the Room.

If he said: "How would you like to go to the show at the Majestic tonight?" as like as not the answer would be: "Mother has asked me to go with her." If he called up a week in advance to arrange for an evening at the theater he would be told that "I can't say now. Mother is considering going."

Now Clarise was anxious to divide her time more equally between her mother and her sweetheart, but the former would have none of it. The mother was not exactly jealous; it was simply that she was so used to her daughter's companionship that she could not conceive of getting along without it.

Moreover, while she did not have any particular objections to Edmund, she could not bear to look forward to a day when she would be separated from Clarise and left alone in the little house on the hill.

When Edmund did succeed in getting with Clarise, which was about once a week, Mrs. Scott was gracious in her treatment of him. Here was a fascinating personality and her physical attraction, considering the difference in their ages, was nearly the equal of her daughter's; but none of her attractions or her graciousness made an impression with Edmund who told himself that he would like to depart her as an "undesirable."

Thus matters stood when Edmund came home one night after a visit at the Scott home. He had received the usual courteous treatment from mother and daughter, but he was fuming when he entered the library and removed his overcoat.

His uncle, ensconced in a big leather chair before a glowing open grate smoking and reading the evening paper, looked up and allowed a broad smile to adorn his face. The uncle was fifty, but looked ten years younger in spite of vivid streaks of gray in his hair and beard.

"Rather late to be getting home, isn't it Ed?" he inquired. "What's the matter? Has something gone wrong at the office? You look worried."

Edmund flung himself into a chair. "Yes, Dick, it's all of twelve o'clock," he said with good-natured sarcasm. "Oh, I haven't been with Clarise all this time. I've been walking, round and round the block, trying to compose myself—and getting worse all the time. And there's no trouble at the office, and you know it."

The office was where "Dick," as the uncle was affectionately called by his nephew, conducted a prospering insurance business, assisted by Edmund, who had a half interest, presented to him as a gift. Edmund's only relative was Dick, and Dick's only relative was Edmund; so they "kept batch" together.

Dick smiled broadly and resumed reading the paper, remarking:

"Better call it off, Eddie. A bachelor's life is the only life. Look at me—hale and hearty at fifty, with no troubles. I've never married and haven't any chance to, and don't want to."

"It listens all right," returned Edmund moodily, "but you've never been in love while I've been head over heels in love with Clarise since the first time I saw her."

Dick threw back his head and laughed aloud. "Bosh! I repeat it. Love at first sight is a joke."

He went at his paper again while Edmund brooded in silence. Of a sudden Dick felt his arm shaken and found Edmund standing over him, his eyes bright.

"I've got it, Dick," the younger man exclaimed. "I've found a way to get Clarise all to myself for one evening."

The uncle arched his eyebrows and drew heavily on his pipe.

"It's just this," Edmund went on enthusiastically. "You've got to go up to Scotts' with me and keep the mother busy with some of those travel stories of yours while I entertain Clarise."

Dick laughed, scornfully.

"Now you're going too far," he protested. "I haven't any use for women, so why try to get me mixed up with a couple of them? Nothing doing, Ed; you'll have to find somebody else for the goat."

But Edmund pleaded persistently, and did everything but get down on his knees, and finally his uncle gave a grudging consent to the plan. Accordingly, a week later the elder man and his nephew were co-callers at the little house on the hill.

Mrs. Scott became interested in Dick's tales, so Edmund was able to get Clarise into another room and have her to himself most of the evening; and for that Dick surreptitiously showed his nephew his clenched fist.

From that time onward matters seemed to take a change for the better. To Edmund's surprise Clarise called him on the phone one day and said:

"Why don't you come up tonight? Mother is going to the theater with a friend."

When this happened three times Edmund got to thinking. "Dick must have talked to Mrs. Scott," was the only solution he could find. "The old boy certainly has my lifelong gratitude if he's explained the situation so she can see it my way."

Edmund came home one night from a call at the Scott home and found his uncle's easy chair unoccupied, which was decidedly unusual. It was about a month after the talk with Dick previously referred to.

Edmund seated himself and waited, but it was fully an hour before the door opened and Dick's smiling face protruded into the room, followed by his rather lank body.

He divested himself of his coat and hat and settled himself in his chair, picked up his paper and lighted a cigar. However, there seemed to be something on his mind, for he shifted uneasily and had difficulty in keeping the cigar burning. Suddenly he dropped the paper and turned, facing Edmund.

"Ed," he said, "you believe in love at first sight, don't you?"

Edmund nodded, wondering what cynical remark was coming.

"Well, so do I," his uncle declared, smiling more broadly than customary with him, while his eyes gleamed with unusual brightness; "and I have a little proposition to submit to you.

"What do you say to a double wedding in the near future? Wouldn't it be nice to have me for a papa-in-law as well as an uncle?"

Shopping With Assurance

It's a great satisfaction, isn't it, to know that when you purchase an article, it's quality and it's price are above reproach?

You can buy such articles with quiet sureness. There will be no comebacks—no regrets—no trouble and wrangling and no doubtful merchandise. This, then, is the established reputation of our store. You can be sure.

"Everything I ever bought there was dependable," is often said of us and our way of doing business. And, in the long run, it pays. We keep our old customers—and we are constantly making new friends.

And the things you buy of a jeweler must be right. There should and can be no middle ground of worth. They are either right or wrong. Watches, cut glass, silver, rings, diamonds—all of these must measure up to a certain standard.

California dates are the equal, if not superior, to the very finest grown in Algeria or Persia, being far superior to the dates generally sold on our Eastern markets. The variety most popular with American growers is the Neglet Noor, which thrives under the soil and climatic conditions of Arizona and California. One tree of this variety found in Algeria has been calculated to be more than 600 years old, according to its "age marks," and yields today an average of 500 pounds of fruit per season. It would be impossible to calculate the number of generations that have enjoyed the fruits of this tree, but a sidelight is given of the possibilities of a date plantation once it has been successfully started.

Split Pea Soup.—Take one pint of dried peas, four quarts of water, one large onion minced fine, four tablespoonfuls of drippings (or butter is better, as it gives a better flavor), three tablespoonfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of minced celery or a few dried leaves, one-half teaspoonful of paprika and two teaspoonfuls of salt. Wash the peas and soak them over night in cold water. In the morning pour off the water and put them into the soup kettle with three quarts of water. Place over the fire and bring to the boiling point. Pour off this water and add four quarts of boiling water, and let the peas simmer for four hours. Add the celery the last hour of cooking. Cook the onion and drippings slowly for half an hour. Drain the water from the peas and save the water. Add flour, water and seasoning and cook half an hour, stirring often. Mash the peas, rub through a sieve, and mix with the other ingredients. Cook 30 minutes and serve hot.

Spanish Eggs.—Cook together one cupful of stewed tomatoes and one clove of garlic, finely minced, one chopped onion, two sweet green peppers seeded and chopped. Cook gently until reduced one-half. Spread on thin slices of buttered toast and lay a poached or fried egg on each slice.

Boiled Fish in Court Bouillon.—Mince one onion, one stalk of celery, three sprigs of parsley. Fry them in a little butter, add two teaspoonfuls of salt, six pepper corns, a bay leaf, three cloves, two quarts of boiling water, one pint of vinegar. Boil fifteen minutes, strain and keep to use in boiling fish. Rub the fish with salt and lemon juice and put in the boiling liquor; simmer until the flesh falls from the bones.

Maple Junket.—Warm just lukewarm one quart of milk, add one dissolved junket tablet, one-third of a cup of maple sugar and pour into sherbet cups. Serve with grated maple sugar and cream, or a pudding sauce made of two-thirds of a cup of maple sugar, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one cupful of boiling water, two tablespoonfuls of butter and vanilla to flavor.

Escalloped Celery With Cheese.—Cook the rough course portions of celery, cut in bits, until tender, add to a rich white sauce in layers with cheese. Bake in a moderate oven.

Hot Apple Dessert.—Pare, quarter, core and slice five or six apples. Put these in a serving dish suitable for the oven, in layers, with seeded raisins and one cupful of sugar; cover and bake until the apple is tender. Remove the cover and set marshmallows over the top of the apples; return the dish to the oven for the browning of the marshmallows. Serve hot, with or without cream.

Fresh Fish Salad.—Flake baked or boiled fish while hot. For a pint of fish, cut six olives very thin lengthwise; to them add a tablespoonful of capers, a teaspoonful of onion pulp, half a teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of lemon juice and two tablespoonfuls of olive oil. Mix, then pour over the fish; mix with two forks, to avoid crushing; let stand in a cool place until ready to serve. Serve on lettuce leaves with mayonnaise in a bowl. Garnish with pickled beets.

A Husband's Advice to Other Husbands

Save Your Wife Work This Way

Through the day most Hilltop men are absent from home, and know little of the many duties that wives must attend to. Housework at the best is hard, and the kitchen work the hardest of all.

But not when you have a McDOUGALL Cabinet in your kitchen. It aids a woman to conveniently quickly prepare the meals. It saves her miles of steps and hours of toil. It saves food by keeping in a protected place and avoiding waste in measuring and mixing.

In countless ways the McDOUGALL pays its cost. Yet, most of all, the McDougall saves your wife's looks and strength. It prevents fatigue, and what is more precious than her health?

We are selling McDougall cabinets this week on the easy terms of $4.50 down and $2.00 per week. McDougall is the first real Kitchen Cabinet ever made. Come in and select yours to-day.

The Hilltop Record

Of Interest to People on the the Hilltop and Vicinity

Vol. 4. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, April 29, 1920 No. 2

The Straphanger

It was a narrow escape.

Who took the "sign" from Si Oto? It was a sigh of relief this time.

People as a community are drawn closer together in sympathy through the influence of an impending danger or disaster. It shows us how interdependent, one upon the other, we are.

"Strikes," like some drugs, cure nothing. They may counteract the effect for the time being, but they never remove the cause.

"Strikes" are inconsistent in principle, contradictory in nature and are violently coercive in method. They are the methods of the highwayman.

The public is always "the goat."
By gain' to work early,
And comin' home late;
You'll always be able,
To get you a "sate."

If you are really in earnest and want to correct things in your community, State or Nation, "get off the fence" and have the courage of your convictions. Even the wrong solution of a question i sbetter than none.

The slogan in the Maumee town is "You will do better in Toledo." That may be a consolation for their baseball team.

Building operations on the hilltop are quite active especially on Broad street.

STRAP HANGER.

Ice cream supper in I.O.O.F. hall 2367 1-2 W. Broad Friday evening April 30th, following playlet. Ice cream 10 cents, homemade cake 5 cents.

Community Sing & Spelling Match

A community meeting under the auspices of the Hilltop Improvement Association and the West Broad St. school will be held Wednesday evening, May 5th at 8 o'clock in the school auditorium. Prof. W. E. Knox will lead in the community sing, and an old fashioned spelling match will follow. A large attendance is desired. A good time is promised.

About 12 new houses are in process of construction on Sullivant avenue, just west of the Imbecile Asylum.

It is said a new picture show is to be in the new building started at the northwest corner of Eldon and Broad.

The Record is now in its fourth year, this being volume 4, No. 2.

The Highland Ave. Parent Teacher's Association will give an entertainment and social, Thursday evening at 7:30 at the school. All parents are invited, admission free. The following interesting program will be presented:

Community singing, led by Miss Cherry.

"Hungry," Charles Gaver and Raymond Hill.

"Ma Sweet and Her Family," 8th grade girls.

Solo, Miss McKelvy.

Address, Mrs. J. H. Francis.

The Hilltop possessed all kinds of street cars last week during the high water scare. One could see lined up near Hague avenue closed cars of the good, bad and indifferent kind, then an inviting summer car, followed by a chilly looking snow sweeper. But after all, guess they are only in keeping with our present April weather.

Hilltop 1920 Diary

By TOP. O'HILL

April 20th. Hardest rainfall of the season, nearly 2 inches in 24 hours.

April 21st. River rising rapidly. People in low lands "noticing things."

April 22nd. All bridges but Rich street closed. Street car riders have advantage of getting over town two ways on one ticket, ride part of the way and walk the rest (around the bridges).

April 23d. Sugar getting so scarce that some Hilltop men are threatening to kiss their wives for "sweetening." Hope they're not disappointed.

April 24th. Eggs dropped some again, 39 cents. We feel more like "shelling" out for them now—but when one is "broke" he shows "yellow" even at that price.

Children's Division of the Church of Christ invite you to their ice cream supper and Playlet in the I. O. O. F. Hall, Friday evening, April 30th.

Miss Goldie Six was operated on for goitre at Mt. Carmel hospital Monday morning. She has been confined to her home for about eight months, a good deal of the time being confined to her bed. The operation was pronounced successful and Miss Six is reported as getting along as well as could be expected at this writing.

HOLD ...GE. N HIGH HONOR

Natives of the East Carry Their Reverence for Monarch of the Jungle to Extremes.

Of all the animals deified in the East none is regarded with more awe than My Lord Tiger. Especially throughout Siam and Indo-China, the tiger is king. Shrines are built and sacrifices made to him; he is as sacred from the attack of the natives as is the white elephant of Siam.

If there are fewer tigers in this part of the East today it is due largely to the efforts of western sportsmen, who occasionally can persuade, bribe or threaten a few natives to aid them in a hunt. Any such lack of respect on the part of the natives is, however, looked upon frowningly by their neighbors, who seem to fear that the tiger will forget the exact individual who attacked him and remember only the community.

Native reverence goes so far as to allow a tiger to prowl undisturbed about a village night after night, attacking and sometimes killing those so unfortunate as to cross his path. In the day the sacred beast retires to his mountain domain, where he stays entirely hidden until nightfall.

It is obvious that the royal tiger rules entirely by fear. Awe-inspiring he is himself, and his supremacy is helped along by the attitude of the natives. To the tiger are attributed all manner of supernatural powers. It is held that he always knows and tracks down those who offend him; it is believed he can even turn himself into a human being, the better to seek out his enemies.

Deaths

John H. Moore, 54, electrician, employed by the Columbus Railway, Power & Light Co., died of complications Monday night at his home, 1063 Richardson Ave. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Minnie Moore; two sons, Herbert and Ralph Moore at home, and two daughters, Mrs. Clayton H. Webber of Zanesville and Mrs. Maurice W. White of Columbus. Funeral at 2 p. m. Thursday at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn cemetery.

Death of Fredrick Emmil Gurlitz

Frederick Emmil Gurlitz born in Germany but a resident of this country many years. He married Miss Catherine Johnson, who gave birth to three children who are now living. He was a member of the Lutheran church. He took a great interest in his children. He left a small property and $3000 life insurance for them. His wife died several years ago. His remains were interred in Greenlawn cemetery. He gave strong evidence of fully trusting in the Lord. A short time before his death a prayer meeting was held at his home, at which he read the scripture lesson, and remarked how interesting the Bible is. In fitting up his small home he purchased he would remark to his neighbors and friends this is for my children. Just before he died he said, "I am going where Katie is," meaning his wife. He said "We will not be dead but asleep until the Judgment day, when we go to Heaven and live together, beautiful thought, trusting in God, the Father of all."

10:30 "The Cloud With the Silver Lining." Communion service. Children's sermon, "The Way of Escape."

2:30 Juniors, Wesley Smoot, leader.

7:30 preaching service. Theme, "The Girls That Missed the Banquet."

A record breaking day. Last Sunday was a record breaking day in the history of this church. The largest Sunday School since the church was started. Mr. H. S. Ballard, chairman of our advisory board challenged 67 churches in the city that Hill Crest would be the first to go over the top in the great Interchurch drive. We did it. In a few hours we raised more than $16,000. This is a splendid record for a church only two years old and with 130 members.

It shows what can be done when Christians get the vision of God's work and their stewardship. We will give over $5,000 to missions in the next four years.

We are trying to serve the community. This year we ran a chautauqua for the Hilltop without charge. We want to minister to the community, spiritually, socially and intellectually. We preach a whole goapel for a whole man. That's why we went over the top. People appreciate a real live church which meets their needs and preaches Christ as all in all. Come and worship with us.

HILL CREST WOMEN'S SOCIETY

Women's meeting Thursday (to night) at the home of Mrs. Montgomery, 177 N. Wheatland Ave., 7:30 sharp. This is our last meeting for sewing carpet rags. Ladies bring your reading contest record cards.

The next quarterly meeting of the Columbus Association Women's Missionary Society will be held in Newark, Ohio, First Baptist church, May 4.

ST. PAUL UNITED EVANGELICAL

Public worship at 10:30 a. m. Subject of sermon, "A Thirst for God."

Intermediate Endeavor at 6:30 p. m. Subject, "How To Show Sympathy." (Consecration service.)

Evangelistic service with sermon at 7:30 p. m. Subject of sermon, "The Elder Brother."

You will receive a very hearty welcome at these services.

St. John Lutheran

Services at 10:30 and 7:30. Morning topic: "The Test of Love."

Evening topic, "The Office and Work of the Holy Spirit."

The morning service will be devoted to the impending drive of the Lutheran church to raise approximately two millions of dollars for the aid of the starving ones of the war-torn countries of Europe. Having contributed liberally to the fund that was raised a few months ago to aid all classes of those sorely tried countries, it is the purpose of this drive to raise funds especially for the aid of the sufferers among the millions of Lutherans in these lands.

The men of St. John's will hold their next meeting on Tuesday evening May 4 with Mr. Dell Howard, 69 Richardson Ave.

THE HILLTOP EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH

10:30 public worship with sermon by pastor on "Lutheran World Service." Every member is urgently requested to be present and strangers are cordially invited. The first half of next week they will be in attendance at Conference at Chillicothe, O.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST CHURCH

Dr. G. R. Robbins will preach Sunday morning on this great topic, "The World for Christ and the Protestant Church" Evening, "Greatly Blessed Yourself of the Lord and Yourself Made A Great Blessing To Others."

The Memorial Baptist and the Hill Crest Baptist churches were the first and only Baptist churches in Columbus to more than raise their quota towards the $100,000,000 to be given by the Northern Baptist Convention. The Southern Baptist Convention have likewise raised $100,000,000. The Baptists will raise more for missionary and educational purposes than all the other thirty denominations put together. Going some surely. Memorial Church raised last Sunday for missions only over $12,000. When full returns have been reported this 2—5304 Westlake Ptg. Co.. .. wf— will probably be about fourteen thousand dollars. Few churches in Ohio have made greater progress during the past two years than the Memorial Baptist Church of Columbus.

Arthur had been allowed to accompany his uncle to court, where the latter was a witness for the defense in a libel action.

While he was being cross-examined, the plaintiff's counsel asked:

"Are you married?"

The witness replied that he was.

"We have no proof of that, sir," said the cross-examiner.

THEORY OF EARTH FORMATION

Its Acceptance Would Explain the Triangular Shape of the World's Continents and Seas.

Any theory which attempts to explain the formation of our world must take into account certain curious facts. Among these is a great preponderance of land in the northern hemisphere and of water in the southern. Second: Most oceans and most continents are more or less triangular in shape, and they nearly all point southward. Third: The land forms an almost unbroken ring in the north and water in the south. Fourth: If we place a map of the northern hemisphere over the southern it will be found that land never falls over land, but always over water, except in a few small patches. These curious facts have given rise to the so called "tetrahedral" theory of the formation of our globe. It has been found by experiment that a round tube, under pressure, tends to collapse into a triangular form, writes Hereward Carrington in Leslie's. This gives the greatest amount of surface for the relative area. Our earth, in cooling, shrinks, and consequently its spherical form (maintained by its revolution or spinning) tends to fall into this triangular or tetrahedral shape. The result of this is that certain flat surfaces are formed and also certain points or angles which project. Water, being fluid, tends to flow on to the flat spaces, being nearer the center of gravity than the projecting corners. The result is that the "continents," which correspond on this theory to the corners, would project or rise above the level of the water; and if we examined a map of the world with this theory in view it will be found that the general conformation of the land and water and their distribution on our globe correspond precisely to this theory.

Philosophical Thought.

When I read what a splendid hill climber this or that automobile is," said a friend of mine who is coming along in years, "it reminds me that I am not so good on hills as I once was.

"There was a time when I used to take hills without slowing up and with no sense whatever of extra exertion; but now right from the start I find myself slowing down and called upon to put on power; and I have to make this added effort all the way up.

"But I can still make the grade; and as long as I can do that I shan't worry."

PALMYRA ONCE MIGHTY CITY

But Today Only Ruins Mark Site of Great Commercial Center of the Third Century.

Palmyra, in Asiatic Turkey, is perhaps the most remarkable "dead city" in the world—a place of mighty ruins, dreary desolation, ghosts and skeletons. There is a living Palmyra, too. It is a little Arab village of some 1,500 people, living in low-mud huts, and is so lost in the midst of the ruins that from a little distance it is invisible.

The ruins of Palmyra are really majestic, with long rows of columns, great arches and massive stone walls still standing. These are the remains of a city that in the third century after Christ was sought as an ally by both Rome and Persia. It was a city of culture and beauty and a great commercial center where caravan routes met and crossed.

The utter decay of Palmyra has been considered something of a mystery, especially since Damascus, her sister city and very similarly situated, remains today just what she was 2,000 years ago—a busy commercial town.

Ellsworth Huntington, an expert on climate, who visited Palmyra, expressed the opinion that the decline of the city was caused by the failure of its water supply, due to a change in climate. He found that there were eight large conduits running from the mountains to the city, but that only two of these contained water at the time.

Palmyra has numerous namesakes. There are no less than 19 Palmyras in the United States, and one in Brazil.

Shopping With Assurance

It's a great satisfaction, isn't it, to know that when you purchase an article, it's quality and it's price are above reproach?

You can buy such articles with quiet sureness. There will be no comebacks—no regrets—no trouble and wrangling and no doubtful merchandise. This, then, is the established reputation of our store. You can be sure.

"Everything I ever bought there was dependable," is often said of us and our way of doing business. And, in the long run, it pays. We keep our old customers—and we are constantly making new friends.

And the things you buy of a jeweler must be right. There should and can be no middle ground of worth. They are either right or wrong. Watches, cut glass, silver, rings, diamonds—all of these must measure up to a certain standard.

THE NEW GARDENER.

By J. K. MARSHALL.

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It was Sunday afternoon, while walking in the park, that the idea came to Thomas Hicks, president and owner of the Thomas Hicks company, brokers, to visit his old home town, Lynnewood, in the southern part of Florida.

It had been ten years since he left home, and in all that time he had not been back. In those years he had been busy and he had made money—plenty of it. Now, he could afford to take the time for a vacation. Then, he had not been feeling up to par of late, and for the past few weeks memories of the old happy, care-free life kept coming to him.

Uppermost among these thoughts was the memory of the last year he had spent there, when he and pretty Martha Wells were engaged. He remembered, with an amused smile, the bitter disappointment of his old rival Ben Gwynne, when Martha told him of their plans. Then came the evening when he told Martha's father of his plan to sell his old home and use the money to give him a start in the city.

Mr. Wells would not hear of this at all. "What!" he had exclaimed. "Sell your home, adjoining mine, and take my daughter away from me to the city to live?" Of course if Tom wanted to sell his home, he could not stop him, but unless he settled down on the place he could not have Martha. So Martha had to make her choice.

At first she tried to persuade Tom to stay; but Tom was ambitious, and wanted to make money. Then she tried to change her father's ideas, but was without success. And so Martha had stayed back home with her father, while Tom went to the city. They had parted with the hopes that, in a very short time Tom would make good, return home and buy back the old place; then he and Martha could be married.

After three years of hard work, and just as he was beginning to realize his dreams of success, Martha had stopped answering his letters, and Tom decided that Martha had ceased to care for him. Now he was going back to see Martha. Even though she were married to another man, he wanted to see her again.

As Tom stood in the depot waiting for the train that would take him to Lynnewood, he reviewed the past few days with satisfaction. They had been busy days, but he had left everything in good shape, so that he would be free from worry and could take his time about coming back.

By the time he had arrived at the little southern town he was a boy again. As he alighted at the station and glanced down the clean, white streets, with their lovely shade trees he wondered how he had ever come to leave it all. He recognized several people on the platform, and at first there came a pang of disappointment when they did not speak to him. Then he remembered why. The day before he left the city he had conceived the idea of returning home incognito.

The result was the purchase of a sandy wig to cover his dark hair, large dark glasses and regular country clothes. And none knew better than Tom just what to buy. There were blue overalls, a straw hat and a gray tweed suit, which he had donned that morning.

He would hire himself as a farmhand somewhere near Martha's home. And, disguised as he was, he could see her often, and perhaps talk to her without being recognized. Then fate took a hand in helping Tom.

The Abe Cory farm was just on the other side of Martha's home and their gardener had left them the day before, so Tom got the job. He learned that Martha was still single and was living alone, her father having died.

Mrs. Cory had not favored hiring the new gardener, concerning whom, as she told her husband, they knew nothing. He had merely given the name, Jim Blake, and said he was from the city.

A few days later Mrs. Cory felt that her prejudice had been well founded. Time after time she saw the gardener stop his work and stand staring across toward Martha's place.

"He is even worse when Martha's out in the yard," she said. "I'm sure he has some designs on Martha, or else he is planning to rob her."

The next afternoon Mrs. Cory watched him as he worked nearer and nearer the fence dividing the two farms. Suddenly he ceased his work entirely and leaned on the fence, looking steadily at Martha's home.

Now Tom had been longing to go over and talk to Martha, but then would come the thought: "No, she doesn't love me now, and I cannot bear to hear her tell me so. As things are, I can see her, and that is something."

As he leaned on the fence he was tempted. There was no one in sight, and the lilac bush, under which they sat the night she had promised to be his wife, was just a short distance from the fence. He wanted, just once more, to sit underneath that bush. That lilac bush was full of memories to him. He wanted to sit under it and imagine that Martha was with him. Leaping the fence, he went quickly to the bush, touching its blossoms as though they were sacred.

His meditations were cut short by the sound of voices coming toward him. As he peered cautiously around the bush he saw Martha and a little girl approaching. He glanced quickly around for some means of escape, and seeing none, stooped lower under the [illegible].

The next instant Martha and the little girl seated themselves on the other side of the bush not three feet away from him. And then the childish voice:

"Aunt Martha, why do you like to sit under this bush better than the others? Did you plant it yourself?"

Tom's heart gave a leap as he listened breathlessly for Martha's answer.

"No, Jeane, dear, a man planted it for me."

"Oh, Aunt Martha, do tell me! Is it the man you have the picture of; the picture I saw you kiss last night?"

As Martha hesitated two strong arms folded around her and a deep voice said: "And tell me, too, Martha."

At first Martha gasped with fright. Then Tom hastily drew off the wig and glasses, and Martha's look of fright turned to one of happiness—then doubt.

"But, Tom, Ben told me that you were married to a city girl."

Tom looked surprised. "And that is why my letters were not answered? There has never been room in my heart for any one but you, Martha."

And the little, romantic Jeane was satisfied.

DETERMINING SEX OF CHICKS

According to French Scientist, the Weight of the Egg is a Certain Indication.

That the weight of eggs may indicate the sex of chickens, under certain conditions, is suggested by experiments reported to the French Academy of Sciences. Noticing the heaviness of the cock, M. Leinhart found that in all breeds of fowl the adult male is from one to two pounds or more heavier than the female, and even in chicks as young as five days the difference ranges from a little more than half an ounce to a little less than an ounce. This made it appear that the difference might also exist in the egg. Many trials showed that the eggs of leghorns weighed from 1.9 to 2.5 ounces, the average being 2.2 ounces, and in the spring of 1918, 60 eggs selected on account of their size, were placed in an incubator for hatching. The selected eggs weighed between 2.1 ounces and 2.5 ounces, seven being slightly below the average, while the others exceeded it. The chicks hatched numbered 48, of which 37 were males and 11 females—convincing the experimenter that the sex of the fowls can be determined in the eggs. It is pointed out, however, that the parent fowls must be pure bred, and that the hens must be of the same age and the eggs gathered at the height of the laying season.

A Vital Question

Dear Friend:

The time has come when I must ask you a question, the contemplation of which has caused me many a sleepless night, bitter weeks of anguish and corresponding days of anxiety. This is a subject of which I hesitate to speak to anyone, as I know the whole community is upset the present time by the same question which agitates me. Many a happy home has been broken up by the same cause, and I dare not even communicate my state of mind to my folks, as they are so old fashioned about such matters. In my distress I humbly turn to you for sympathy it may surprise you to know that I would consult you upon so important a subject which only my heart should know but like the morning dawn, the whole affair must come to light and the public must know sooner or later, so I ask your kindly advice as I know you will understand better than I can explain. I am asking a great favor of you, and while you are considering this, I wish you to set aside all care, all joy and properly consider the question. I hate to ask it, but I must come to the point. Do you think it is time to take off my winter underwear?

Anxiety.

Mexican Eggs.—Split three green peppers lengthwise and take out the seeds. Fry in hot fat until well cooked. Fry six thin slices of ham and place on slices of toast; lay the peppers over the ham and put a fried or poached egg on each slice.

Spanish Eggs.—Cook together one cupful of stewed and strained tomato, one clove of garlic finely minced, one chopped onion and two green peppers chopped. Cook gently until reduced to one-half. Spread on thin slices of toast and lay a fried egg on each slice.

Baked Eggs With Cheese.—Prepare circles of toast with the centers of each slice slightly scooped, leaving a depression. Spread with butter, then fill the hollow with creamed cheese. This may be grated cheese mixed with hot cream to form a paste. Arrange on a hot platter, break an egg on each piece of toast and sprinkle with cheese; place in a hot oven until the eggs are set.

Baked Eggs With Ham.—Make a cream sauce and add to it one cupful of finely minced cooked ham. Butter custard cups, break an egg into each, place in a pan of water in a hot oven until the eggs are firm. Spread the minced ham on slices of toast and turn the eggs on it.

Fried Onions and Apples.—Slice two onions very thin and cook in a tablespoonful of hot fat until yellow, then add half a dozen sliced tart apples; cook until soft, adding a bit of water and fat if needed. Just before serving add a teaspoonful of sugar. Serve with roast pork, pork sausages or pork steak or chops. If one does not like the onions or desires variety core the apples without peeling, slice in half-inch slices and fry carefully not to break them. Serve with chops, making an overlapping ring of the apples around the chops.

Add one tablespoonful of cornstarch to each cupful of flour in making cake. It improves the grain greatly.

Cream of Green Pea Soup.—Take one pint of peas or one can of peas, cook until soft, mash in the water in which they were cooked, put through a sieve, add enough water to make a quart. Bind with two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour cooked together. Season with half a teaspoonful each of salt and sugar, a dash of pepper and a pint of thin cream or milk. Serve hot.

Where Did He Get This Hat?

Whether mental telepathy can be used in the directing of a hat in a windstorm is not known, but a resident of West Philadelphia believes he has a hat which knows a thing or two.

During the recent "tail" of a blizzard, which must have been very strong to judge by this tale, this man was entering the street in which he lives, when zip! went the hat, and, to use his words, he said: "To h—— with it!" As the hat blew up the street at a terrific rate, he turned up his coat collar and proceeded on his way. This is where the mental telepathy comes in. When he reached his home there was the hat waiting for him, wedged against the doorstep.

Eggs With Creamed Celery.—Make a cream sauce and add enough boiled celery cut in small pieces to serve as a vegetable. Spread on buttered toast and lay a poached egg on each slice. The coarser portions of celery may be used for this dish, using as little water as possible in cooking and adding what is left for flavor to the white sauce.

Can This Be True?

Humor, either fresh or stale, is not an ordinary characteristic of government reports. In an official document, recently published by our government on the subject of The Netherlands during the war, the following passage appears to have escaped the serious-minded editor's censorial pencil: "Holland's cheese industry is noted and notorious. At least one province — Limburg — has given its name of a species of cheese which is both widely and strongly known."

Parent-Teacher Meeting

On Thursday evening, April 29, the Parent-Teachers Association held a "get together" meeting at the Highland Avenue School building. Under the teachers untiring efforts, a splendid program was arranged and carried out by the pupils of Eighth A Grade. The entertainment opened with the familiar "How d'ye do?" song led by Miss Cherry, in which all formality was lain aside and immediately a spirit of good will seemed to prevail in each heart and added so much to the enjoyment of the evening. Miss McKelvey rendered two solos which were much appreciated.

A dialogue, "Hungry," by Charles Garver and Raymond Hill was given the undivided attention of the audience, and the hearty cheering needed no further demonstration to express its appreciation.

The orchestra of thee pieces, Mabel Taylor, Guy Clark and Thomas Osborne, played the interlude.

A play, "Ma Sweet and Her Family," was heartily enjoyed as was attested by the ready applause of the audience, as each performer carried through her part with an ease and naturalness of manner, which, had any mistake or error been committed, even the most cynical might not have detected it. The characters in the play were represented by Margaret Elzey, as "Ma Sweet" in a quaint costume of 1812; Ruth Negus, Anna Nowell, Beatrice Sickman, Geraldine Loofburrow, Dorothy Harrison, Irma Williams and Rose Carter, the latter having the famous Charlie Chaplin backed off the stage as a "mimic."

We should be very unfair and unjust in this article if we fail to mention and give full merit and honor to an address given by Mrs. Frances, wife of School Superintendent Frances, which was very timely and appropriate. We recall two important points of her discourse, viz.: Children should be permitted to "possess" their possessions. (Can not this be profitably applied when the child elects to choose a career?) And excuses given to the teacher by the parents for infractions of any rules of school which has to do with the homelife, should be given in a frank and candid manner with absolute truthfulness, to the end that all concerned might work out problems thereby involved to the benefit and satisfaction of each one.

Here's hoping this meeting will be the means of increasing the interest in school work and also membership in the Parent-Teachers' Association. It was disappointing to learn there is a membership of only 69 persons, whereas there is an enrollment of about 900 punils.

Parents (and preachers) get behind this organization and see to it that Highland Avenue School goes "over the top" and compels other schools to sit up and take notice. Come, now, and either boost or "bust."

We have been asked the question: "How can we reduce the high cost of living?" Our answer is: "Conserve." Recently we observed in two Columbus stores the garbage man carry out some baskets (commonly called bushels of decayed vegetables and fruits. At this time these articles sold, wholesale ,at $2.00 to $2.50 per bushel. Did those merchants lose on that deal? Assuredly not. Note the retail price at present. Did these merchants boost prices on the present consignment of said articles to cover the loss on the former? Who's the goat?

Recently we also noticed in a store window some decaying oranges. Will that merchant sell those oranges at a reduction while they are still in a useable state? Speak up if you chance to make such a purchase.

The foregoing facts are only a few instances of what is true of the sale and usage of other lines of merchandise, such as furniture, clothing, etc. At this time when strikes and strife seem paramount our theory is to discontinue luxurious and needless living expenses. Use substitutes whenever possible and do not force merchants to cater to the desires of a gullible people.—L. C. L.

Indoor Picnic

The following beautiful poem was handed to us by Rev. A. E. Cowley, pastor of Hill Crest Baptist Church, and will be sung at that church next Sunday evening:

Faith of our Mothers, living still
In all things beautiful and bright:
Yea, nobly will we do God's will.
And live our lives as in His sight.
Faith of our Mothers, Living Faith,
We will be true to thee till death.

Faith of our Mothers, living still
In strong sons' lives and words of praise
We humbly own our debt to thee,
And love thee as in former days.
Faith of our Mothers, conquering Faith,
We will be true to thee till death.

Faith of our Mothers, living still
In deeds of love and service strong,
We gladly pledge our strength to thee
To soothe the sorrows, right the wrong.
Faith of our Mothers, saving Faith,
We will be true to thee till death.

Faith of our Mothers, living still
In words and truths that ne'er can die,
Thy sons and daughters ever dear
Shall claim the faith that brings God nigh,
Faith of our Mothers, holy Faith,
We will be true to thee till death.

—Copyrighted, 1916, by Geo. E. Atkinson.

MOTHER'S EMPIRE

The queen that sits upon the throne of home, crowned and sceptered as none other ever can be, is mother. Her enthronement is complete, her reign unrivalled, and the moral issues of her empire are eternal. "Her children arise up and call her blessed."

Her memory is sacred while she lives, and becomes a perpetual inspiration, even when the bright flowers bloom above her sleeping dust.

There is one vision that never fades from the soul, and that is the vision of mother and home.

H. H. BIRKINS.

Oldtime Use of Tobacco.

Not essentially new are any of the modern forms of tobacco using. The leaves wrapped about with corn husk roughly correspond to our civilized cigarette, the leaves rolled without wrapping of another material, to our cigar. The dark-skinned Americans knew the delights of quid, as proved by the testimony of Oviedo that when the Spaniards landed in Paraguay in 1500 the hostile natives came forth "beating drums, throwing water, chewing herbs and spurting the juice towards them."

STRENUOUS KIND OF BATH

Finn First Thoroughly Opens Pores With Steam, and Then Takes a Roll in the Snow.

The Finn takes bathing as a serious rite and the bath-house is the first building erected on the farm. Generally, it is a rough building, 15 to 18 feet high, with a chimney-like vent in its peaked roof or a small window over the door for the same purpose. The door opens into a little room from which another door opens into the bath-house. In one corner of the main room is a wide fireplace built of large, round stones, compactly piled around a deep fire box. At the sides of the room there are three or four platforms at different heights.

On tub night, or day, a roaring fire is built and allowed to burn until the stones are superheated. It is then raked out and pails of water are thrown over the stones which fills the place with dense steam in which the entire family is soon enveloped. After steaming to his satisfaction a pail of water is thrown over the bather in the anteroom or he takes a vigorous roll in the snow, then a run to the house, clad only in the garment of cleanliness.

Proper Posture for Sleep.

Most people sleep on their right sides, though children up to the age of 14 sleep equally well on either side or in the supine position. Dr. E. H. C. Allen, writing in the Journal of Medical Sciences (Dublin), says we should all accustom ourselves to sleeping in any of these positions.

It is interesting to note that men of science have not discovered what sleep is. There are many theories, but none of these is satisfactory. But one needs not be a man of science to say that sleep is absolutely necessary and if it cannot be obtained by natural means we must resort to artificial.

HIGHLAND AVE. FRIENDS

Rev. Herbert A. Handy, Pastor.

Preaching services at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. by Rev. Charles H. Stalker, Evangelist.

Mr. R. A. Shank and wife will have charge of the music.

The revival meeting is in progress, and the interest is increasing. The gospel is being given with no uncertain sound, and it is rare privilege that we are having, in hearing this man of God who has seen thousands bow at an altar of prayer, under his stirring messages.

We are having a treat in listening to Mr. and Mrs. Shank of Cincinnati, sing. You will enjoy hearing them. Come.

HILL CREST BAPTIST CHURCH

Steel and Eldon Avenue

10:30—Special Mothers' Day services all day. Topic in morning: "The Cloud With a Silver Lining."

Juniors 2:30. Leader, Jennie Krull.

Senior B. Y. P. U., 6:30.

7:30—Special sermon by the pastor. Subject: "Faith of Our Mothers." All the grand old hymns that mother loved will be sung. Appropriate selections in honor of mother will be sung. Don't miss this service.

Bring your mother with you. If she cannot walk, phone H. 3685 and we will send an automobile after her, but by all means bring her. The heaviest burden of the war was borne by the mothers of the nations, let's all get together and honor them. Maybe her hair is gray and her face is wrinkled, but they are the badge of honor of the glorious marks of faithful service. Good old Abe Lincoln said, "All I am I owe to my angel mother." Honor your mother next Sunday; dont wait until she's gone and then go to church and cry, but bring her to church now on your strong manly arm, let her have the roses while she can smell them.

Prayer meeting Wednesday at 7:30.

Juniors of Tabernacle Baptist Church will meet at Hill Crest Baptist Church to have their meeting with Hill Crest Juniors. Jennie Krull, leader, 2:30 sharp. We are having splendid meetings. Come!

HEREDITY

By WILL T. AMES

(©, 1910, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It's only after years and years that they can do it, these linotypists. I mean that only after years and years of keeping the mind and the eye and every sense pinned tight to the job comes a time, perhaps, when the mechanical and spiritual intelligence of the operator fall a little apart, as it were, and a man can follow copy and set clean proofs with part of his brain the while another part goes a-wandering.

Even then it isn't every one who experiences the change; only the more agile minded, and they must have served long and faithfully at the keyboard.

So you may know that Bedient was an old hand, old enough to have a just right to the gray in his hair, when I tell you that no one in the Graphic's composing room had a cleaner score of errors at the end of a day's work and that no one was farther beyond the deadline in the number of slugs cast than this same Richard Bedient; and all in spite of the fact that for hours of every day his thoughts were dwelling, these last four months, on the girl at the next machine.

She had come in answer to one of the advertisements that Briggs, the foreman, had inserted so often of late in a trade paper; for the Graphic was expanding and operators were scarce and hard to find.

When Briggs gave her Farley's old machine, next to Bedient, the gray-haired operator had noticed only that she was quiet and businesslike and wore her hair rather plainly. When, later in the day, Briggs addressed the girl as Miss Murgatroyd, Bedient glanced keenly at the newcomer, really observing her for the first time.

Thereafter, many times during the day, he studied the girl unobtrusively.

"Where Did She Come From?"

On the way out, at the day's end, he spoke to the foreman as the latter was closing his desk.

"That new operator on No. 14, Mr. Briggs, where did she come from?"

"Toledo. Looks to be better than most we've been getting." This was purely professional judgment. "Nice kind of girl, apparently."

"Yes," responded Bedient, and passed on.

A curious sort of friendship grew up between the new girl and Bedient. In her way Miss Murgatroyd was as reserved as the silent, courteous compositor whom everyone liked, but with whom no one ever became familiar. Bernice Murgatroyd was voted "difficult" by the nine other girls and given up as hopeless by all but one of the dozen bachelor operators and proofreaders. One of the latter, young Royce Fellows, was frankly smitten and as frankly persistent, and for him Bernice had a frequent bright smile and a cheery, if brief, word.

But toward the older man she bore herself with a singular half-diffident, half-confident air that might have been born of lifelong acquaintance, and in which there was a suggestion of unquestioning faith. As for what this slip of a girl meant to Bedient—but let the story tell itself.

Both lived within walking distance of the office, and their ways lay through the same streets. Almost always they walked home together. Bedient's boarding place was the further on. Once, after they had said good-night, he turned for a parting glimpse of the slim young figure, to see that the girl had stopped half-way up the steps and was gazing after him.

Bedient's heart leaped, but he laughed it out of its folly. It might have been as well if he could have seen the wistful look in the deep blue eyes and the quick flush as she waved her hand to him and ran hastily up the steps.

For Bedient, remembering his forty-seven years, had beaten back his longings and watched, with patient hope the eager suit of young Fellows. Then for two days the proofreader came no more to Bernice's machine on the flying visits with the whispered joyous jokes. The second evening Bedient took a liberty.

"Little girl," he said, as they began the long walk home, "I noticed yesterday and today that you and the boy were not getting along together. Don't think me meddlesome, please; but I'm terribly afraid of causeless quarrels, of misunderstandings. It isn't my business, I know; but I'm worried about you—and Fellows. He's a good, clean boy. A girl would be safe with him. You—you care for him, don't you?"

The girl's voice was very low. "Why do you ask?"

They had walked almost half a block before Bedient answered. "I'll tell you. Your mother was Gertrude Holt. I didn't have to ask you; you are she over again. She and I—well, we loved each other. We quarreled needlessly. I don't suppose either of us thought it would last a week. People seldom see to the end of such things. She married John Murgatroyd. He took her to Toledo. I have never seen her, but I know. Your father—well, your father was not exactly—"

"You need not spare him," the girl interrupted. "At the end it killed mother—a year ago."

"Yes," said Bedient solemnly. "I heard. You see, don't you, child, why I presume to meddle? It happens so often. I'm not much, but at least I wouldn't have mistreated your mother. This young Fellows is an honorable lad—a fine type. I hope—"

It was very hard for Bedient to say it—hard to dissemble. He was floundering a bit when Bernice, in a voice that trembled with temerity at her sudden resolution, said:

"Royce Fellows and I have had no lovers' quarrel. I have never thought of him except as a witty boy." She hesitated an instant, then, mastering the tremor in her voice, went on: "Did you think I didn't know about you—that I didn't know you—long, long before I ever saw you? Why, ever since I was a little girl, my mother has told me, over and over again, about your great, splendid, chivalrous heart, your strength, your patience, your lonely, sacrificing life!

"Did you think she didn't know, at last, whose money it was that my shameless father used for years to keep us from starving while he idled and gambled? And that she didn't tell me? Why, you have been almost a god to me since I was a child!"

"Why, Bernice, I—I——" Bedient's floundering was hopeless now.

"Listen," pursued the girl breathlessly, "you knew me at a glance, because I had inherited my mother's features, didn't you? Well, that isn't the only thing I inherited from my mother. And after she had gone and I thought of you day and night, living on and on with your dear life empty of the kind of happiness it ought to have known—that you were made for—I promised myself that you should have it if you wanted it. I came here, Richard, to give you, if it seemed to you worth while, my inheritance. Oh, man, man! Don't you understand? My mother loved you—always!"

RESPECT FOR MOTHER

A few days ago we heard a stripling of sixteen designate the mother who bore him as the old woman. By coarse husbands we have heard wives so called occasionally, though in the latter case the phrase is more often used endearingly. At all times, as commonly spoken, it jars upon the ears and shocks the senses. An old woman should be an object of reverence above and beyond almost all other phases of humanity.

Her very age should be her surest passport to courteous consideration.

The aged mother of a grown-up family needs no other certificate of worth. She is a monument of excellence, approved and warranted. She has fought faithfully "the good fight" and come off conqueror. Upon her venerable face she bears the marks of the conflict in all its furrowed lines.

The most grievious of the ills of life have been hers; trials untold, and known only to God and herself, she has borne incessantly, and now, in her old age, her duty done, patiently awaiting her appointed time, she stands more beautiful than ever in her youth, more honorable and deserving than he who has slain his thousands, or stood triumphant upon the proudest field of victory. Young man, speak kindly to your mother, and ever courteously, tenderly of her.

But a little time, and ye shall see her no more forever. Her eye is dim, her form bent, and her shadow falls graveward. Others may love you when she has passed away—a kind hearted sister, perhaps, or she whom of all the world you choose for a partner—she may love you warmly, passionately; children may love you fondly, but never again, never, while time is yours, shall the love of woman be to you as that of your old, gentle, kind, affectionate, trembling mother has been.—Selected.

EPISODE TWO

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(©, 1930, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Throu the private hedge and across the lawn Warren Bradley sprinted with all the speed which had, in days gone by, made him a frequent victor in college meets. This time, however, he was running for something more valuable than a loving cup or his name engraven on a bronze tablet. Quite possibly he was running for his life.

He had been walking unconcernedly down a street crowded with idle strikers when some one with pointing finger had indicated him as "the man who done the trick." The hundred or so morose looking men, seeking for trouble and glad of an outlet for energy accumulated from several days without work, had started in pursuit.

There was no time to stop and explain that it was a case of mistaken identity. Bradley, as former superintendent of the largest woolen mill in the state, had handled men sufficiently to understand the strange vagaries of mob psychology. He recognized instinctively that his cue was flight first and explanations afterward.

So far he had eluded his pursuers. But an approaching murmur, undoubtedly hostile, warned him of the necessity for doing something else than standing in the center of a large treeless lawn. If he could only get inside the house. There was no time to ring the bell and wait on the possible delay of the people within.

Suddenly, easily accessible from the veranda roof, an open window upstairs caught his attention. He wasted no time in reflecting that he was about to assume the character of a second-story man, but climbed the veranda pillar, crawled through the window and closed it behind him. As he did so an evil-faced man parted the hedge and looked through. Then the crowd swept by.

Obviously Warren might now descend by the way he had come in. Yet, once safely in, he shrank from being detected in the act of coming forth. Furthermore, there was no guarantee that the baffled mob would not swing back and pick him up on its return.

Deciding that to remain in the frying pan was preferable to jumping into the fire, he turned to hunt up the occupants of the house and tender his explanations.

The room in which he found himself was evidently a lady's bedroom, metamorphosed for the time being into the likeness of an anteroom of a modiste. Over the cretonned, cushioned chairs, across the bed, and even suspended from the mirrors above the dressing table were feminine garments of every description.

But Warren did not stop to admire the elaborate display. Finding the stairway, he descended and parted the heavy draperies which apparently curtained the living room. Three women uttered screams. The fourth, superbly decked in a bridal gown, paused in the act of slowly circling before a huge pier glass and looked at him in astonishment. Even as he told his story, Warren decided that she was the loveliest girl he had ever seen.

Two of the women were evidently seamstresses, the third her aunt. Mutual acquaintance was presently established and Warren's explanations accepted without question. Also, it was suggested that he summon a taxicab and avoid any possible meeting with the incensed men.

As Warren turned to go, the aunt said as one who proclaims a fact which all the world should know: "We're all upset, because my niece is to be married tomorrow."

"Indeed," said Warren, mentally congratulating the wonderfully blessed bridegroom, "I wish her every happiness."

"To William B. Bristol!" added the aunt in evident pride.

William Bristol! That beautiful radiant girl! Why, he supposed every body in town knew who and what Billy Bristol was. Could it be that in this secluded spinsterly home there had never penetrated tales of the devious ways in which that dissolute man squandered his fabulous fortune?

He hesitated. The two seamstresses had gone to another room whence issued the dull purr of a sewing machine. He looked gravely into the girl's clear eyes.

"Miss Stoddard," he began, "until a minute ago I did not know your name. I shall never see you again, for tomorrow I leave for the West. In a way, you have been the means of very possibly saving my life today. In return, I am going to be very presumptuous and advise you. As you value your future happiness, wait! I know the man you are planning to marry—I have known him all my life. Don't marry that man!"

Forestalling the exclamations he saw rising on the indignant lips of the aunt, and carrying away with him an unforgettable picture of the girl's lifted eyebrows and affronted look, Warren Bradley turned on his heel and left the house.

It was on the surf-washed beach at Santa Barbara that they met again. Warren, pacing the sands moodily, was wondering what the years held in store besides the golden fortune they seemed bent on bestowing.

Startled at the sound of his name spoken in soft contralto unwestern accents, he turned abruptly. Before him stood, as radiantly beautiful as he recalled her five years ago, Madelaine Stoddard—or was she Mrs. Bristol?

"No," she said shaking her head in answer to his inquiry. "I didn't do it. I was furiously angry with you, but I made investigations. I didn't have far to go—my own lawyer told me. All that you had intimated was true. It let me out of a marriage I had contemplated, not from love, I can see now, but, oh, I guess from sheer boredom! Anyway, I owe you considerable gratitude. It is a debt I can never repay." She held out a slim hand.

Warren took it gently. "Never is a long time," he said with a smile. "I could tell you something which would seem more outrageous than what I told you before," he added.

Her eyes dropped, and somehow encouraged, Warren continued. "Would you mind my saying that, casual as our first meeting was, I have never been able to imagine any other woman decked as you were when I first saw you, 'decked as a bride?'" He paused, then added slowly, "Many, many hours I have spent wishing that I had met you in such a way as to give me the right to follow the usual line of procedure which leads through courtship to a proposal of marriage. If I dared, I should say now, 'Madelaine, will you marry me?'"

Madelaine did not answer for a moment. "I am all alone in the world," she said at last. "For years and years I have been perfectly conventional. I think, just once, I might—wait!" She held up a restraining hand. "I must confess. When you peremptorily took away the man I expected to marry, you put another in his place. I came West not unhoping that I might chance upon that man."

In the dusk that was enveloping them Warren held out his arms. "Madelaine, Madelaine, my darling!" he whispered.

Presently Madelaine looked at him with a mischievous sparkle in her eye. "Just two episodes in our lives," she said. "Both very different. In one you forbade me to marry. In the other you beg me to!"

"There's yet another way in which they differ," smiled Warren tenderly. "This one is going to last forever!"

SPRING

Spring is coming, in it's glory,
And the world is glad today,
For she tells a wondrous story,
Brings the pleasant month of May.

And the birds are joyously singing,
In the green and leafy trees.
While the flowers from earth are springing,
As the winter quickly leaves.

In the meadows flowers are growing,
As the robin builds his nest.
And the gardeners seeds are sowing,
Hoping they may reap the best.

The fruit trees are in blossom,
And the fruit will soon be seen.
For the sun in splendor shining,
Tells us spring-time now is queen.

Once again the laughing waters,
In the brooklets ripples by.
And the grass is fresh with greenness,
Blending with the pale blue sky.

While the silvery clouds float by,
Send the showers as they pass.
For the summer now is nigh,
And the spring is gone at last.

SEILLER'S 11th ANNIVERSARY SALE, MAY 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15.

When many of the railroad boys who were over seas in the service of Uncle Sam returned, they were hailed as heroes and crowned with laurels of love; now they are asking for what they claim is a just and honest recompense for their services with the railroad companies, and the public in many places are ready to denounce them as Anarchists and Bolshevists

MOTHERS AND SONS

Most boys go through a period when they have great need of patient love at home. They are awkward and clumsy, sometimes strangely willful, and perverse, and they are desperately conscious of themselves; and are sensitive to the least word of censure or effort at restraint.

Authority frets them; they are leaving childhood, but they have not yet reached the sober good sense of manhood. They are an easy prey to the subtle temptations of the world: perhaps they adopt skeptical views, from sheer desire to prove that they are independent, and can do their own thinking.

Now it is the mother's hour. Her boy needs her more now than when he lay in his cradle, Her finer insight and serener faith may hold him fast and prevent his drifting into dangerous courses. At all events there is very much that only a mother can do for her son, and that a son can receive only from his mother, in the critical period of which we are now thinking.

It is well for him, if she has kept the freshness and brightness of her youth, so that she can now be his companion and friend as well as mentor. It is a good thing for a boy to be proud of his mother; to feel complacent when he introduces her to his comrades, knowing that they cannot help seeing what a pretty woman she is, so graceful, and attractive, and winsome. There is always hope for a boy when he admires his mother, and mother should care to be admirable in the eyes of their sons.

Not merely to possess characters which are worthy of respect, but to be beautiful and charming, so far as they can, in person and appearance. The neat dress, the becoming ribbon, and smooth hair are all worth thinking about, when regarded as means of retaining influence over a soul, when the world is spreading lures for it on every side.

Above all things, mothers need faith, genuine, hearty, loving trust in God, a life of meek, glad acquiescence in His will; lived daily through years in the presence of sons, is an immense power. They never can get away from the sweet memory that Christ was their mother's friend. There is a reality in that which no false reasoning can persuade them to regard as a figment of the imagination.—Selected.

THE GUIDING SPARK

By DORA MOLLAN

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Betty Crew sat on one side of the fireplace in Great-Grandfather Adams' comb-backed Windsor chair. In the opposite chimney corner Travers Raymond occupied an oaken settle black with age. Both were seemingly intent on the flames leaping up the huge chimney. The gnarled hickory back log blazed steadily. Sticks of silver birch crackled, shooting out sparks with reckless zest. A fiery star fell perilously close to Betty. She kicked it back unconcernedly with the toe of her slipper.

"That is not safe wood to burn in an open fire. Oak is much more dependable." Travers Raymond gave the advice perfunctorily. Plainly he was occupied with his own thoughts.

"That's just why I burn it when I get a chance. I was always given ice cream instead of fireworks on the Fourth of July."

Something in Betty's tone aroused her companion from his abstraction. "Pretty hard on a girl whose ancestors fought so there might be something to celebrate on that day," he laughed.

"Trav, promise me one thing. When we are married let the word 'ancestor' be taboo in our house. All my life I have been, like an island, entirely surrounded by them—with perhaps a bridge or two leading to some other pedigreed island like you. Aunt Jane talks nothing else. I'm not allowed to be myself, ever—just an echo of the ghostly steps that walk this old house!"

The flush on Betty's cheeks showed how earnest were her words.

"I'm unreservedly with you there Bets. Those old duffers had their lives—why should they want to butt in on ours and order them according to their musty codes?"

"Trav!"

"Yes, Betty."

"I wonder if they really do want to influence our lives according to their earth-time ideas—after they are dead, I mean. Times, conditions, everything changes so; new conditions grow up. Does it seem reasonable that they, in the spirit world, if they are still aware of earthly things, are incapable of readjusting their views and hopes to fit better into the scheme of lives now living?"

Betty was fingering nervously an oval gold locket that hung from her neck by a narrow black ribbon.

"From what I remember of Grandfather Raymond he would be just that incapable of seeing anything in any new light, though the world had turned inside out meantime." Travers smiled grimly at the recollection of his paternal forebear.

"I've been thinking this over a lot, Trav. I suppose the new world-wide interest in spirit manifestations started me. And I got to wondering, Trav, about our mothers." Betty's voice was low. Raymond, all his abstraction gone, was keenly attentive.

"When they both expressed as their dying wish that we two marry," continued the girl, "of course, they were convinced that it would be for our best interest and happiness. Because they had been so happy in their friendship they expected us to be more so in this sequel to it. It's over five years since my mother died. Travers, and yours went the year before. Do you think they would still ask it if their spirits could speak to us now?"

"Are you suggesting that we try to get into communication with them through some spiritualist medium, Betty? Somehow I can't bring myself to put any faith in them." Travers shifted his position uneasily. The girl thought she discerned in him a fresher interest, more animation, than he had displayed for many days.

"No," she answered. "I wasn't thinking of proposing that. Just that we sit here quietly, bathing ourselves in the memory of them, giving to them every atom of our thought and our sympathy. Maybe—who knows?—it is in the power of their spirits to communicate with us in some way—to give us a sign—if we can place ourselves in tune with them. Putting their pictures here before us might help us to concentrate ourselves upon them."

Gad! I believe you've hypnotized me, Betty—or else it's this nature's incense from the fire. You are actually convincing me that such a fantastic thing might really happen. Shall we use the portraits in our lockets?"

Upon the impulse of his own suggestion Raymond's hand went to the charm at his fob, seeking to detach it. But the hand fell limply, and Travers, confronted by a sudden realization, stared straight ahead searching for escape from a dilemma. He was too absorbed to notice that Betty had gone suddenly white and that one hand clutched the oval locket tightly.

A way out came to Travers. "Er—won't our fathers' portraits in the reverse side of the lockets, confuse our memories, Betty?"

"Yes, Trav; I'm sure they would," agreed Betty hurriedly, almost eagerly. "We'll take them out and lay them face down on the table." She drew toward her a small stand covered with a time-yellowed China shawl, deeply fringed. "They must remain faced down, you know—their personalities must not intrude."

"An excellent thought," agreed Raymond, greatly relieved. And presently the banished miniatures lay blankly side by side on the silken shawl while those of the mothers from their golden frames gave back the loving gaze of the grown-up boy and girl.

The ancient clock in the hall struck nine. The two young figures in front of the blazing fire stared straight at the pictures. In the face of the girl and the face of the man was tender filial reminiscence, loyalty—and appeal; in each pair of young eyes something that seemed to be begging, entreating.

Of a sudden, in the rear face, a sap pocket in a birch log exploded, showering sparks. A little flaring brand flew straight into Betty's silken lap. Crying a warning, Travers sprang to pluck it away. A button on his sleeve caught in the fringe of the China shawl and the sweep of his arm as he struck the spark away brought everything from the table to the floor.

Travers was not quicker than Betty to retrieve from the hearth rug his locket and the nearest of the unframed miniatures.

As they rose, breathless, from the recovery of their disordered treasures the man and the girl stood facing one another, each holding in one hand a locket and in the other a detached picture.

Stealing a glance to assure herself that the unframed portrait she held was unharmed, Betty Crew sustained the greatest surprise of her life.

"Why—why, Trav! Where did this come from?" she gasped. "It's that madonna of a secretary of yours, Miss Chalmers!"

But Travers, too, had glanced at the picture in his hand, and was exclaiming simultaneously: "Betty! What does this mean? This isn't your father—it's young Forbes, the newspaper chap!"

The scared look faded from Betty's eyes and into them came gladness. "Oh, don't you see, Trav? It's the sign we asked for—"

"I've Been Thinking This Over a Lot, Trav."

The Straphanger

Why had a cold reception, the Strap Hanger has "cold" feet.

Uncle Sam is at the bat. How many "strikes" have been called on him and yet he is not out.

"Strikes" are the natural results of the abuses of "special privilege" in days gone by. We sowed the wind, and now we reap the whirlwind.

A Union is all right as long as it seeks to benefit society as a whole but all wrong when it seeks to benefit itself at the expense of society as a whole.

The quality of service is the ultimate gauge by which all men are measured. Not how much you do but how well you do it. How much love do you put into it.

"Victory" Park is now "Defeated" Park.

Would it not be a good idea since we must have the "movie" houses open on Sunday, to compel them to show only sacred or educational films and show them free? This would give the churches a chance.

STRAP HANGER.

Expressions of sympathy and a tribute of love from Glenwood Camp No. 7683 Royal Neighbors of America to one we have known long and loved much. Vivian Lidie Hanna, who was called to her heavenly home Sunday, May 9th, 1920.

Words fail to express our grief that one so young should be taken from a home where love and devotion reigned supreme; a home with the motto, "Do unto others as you would they should do unto you."

She was a faithful and proficient member of Glenwood Camp, always planning something for the good of the order and of interest to others.

Found at her post as Marshal for five years from the time the Camp was instituted until she was called home.

While all nature is budding into bloom we lay her dear body away among the flowers she has always loved. We shall miss but we shall meet her, there will be one vacant chair. We shall linger to caress her while we breathe our evening prayer.

This will be keenly felt by father, mother, brother and six sisters who survive her. Resting in peace, sleep sweet, good night, dear Vivian, good night.

The second annual track meet of the West Side Schools will take place at Glenwood Park, Friday, May 21st at 3:30 o'clock. All of the West Side schools have entered in the meet and they are as follows: Avondale, Bellows, Chicago, Dana, Feiser, Franklinton, Highland, Holy Family, St. Aloysius, and West Broad.

A prize will be given to the winner in each event and a pennant to the school scoring the most points, in all sixty-five prizes will be distributed to the boys and girls taking part in the meet.

A similar meet will be held in the North and South ends of the city and the winners of the three sections will compete for City honors at Neil Park sometime in June.

If the weather is warm this will be a fine time for the mothers and fathers to come down to the park and watch the youngsters perform and stay and have supper in the park.

Revival Meetings

at

Highland Avenue Friends Church

These meetings are times of special blessing, and the opportunity of attending them will soon be past. Come and share the blessings of these closing days.

Only a Dad with a tired face,
Coming home from his daily race;
Bringing little of gold or fame,
To show how well he has played the game;
But glad in his heart that his own rejoice,
To see him come and to hear his voice.

Only a Dad of a brood of four,
One of ten million men or more;
Plodding along in the daily strife;
Bearing the whips and scorns of life;
With ne'er a whimper of pain or hate,
For the sake of those who at home wait.

Only a Dad neither rich nor proud,
Merely one of the surging crowd;
Toiling striving from day to day,
Facing whatever may come his way;
Silent when'er the harsh condemn,
And bearing it all for the love of them.

Only a Dad but he gives his all,
To smooth the way for his children small;
Doing with courage set and grim
The deeds that his father did for him;
This is a line that for him I pen,
Only a Dad but the best of men.

STOP WASTE OF MOMENTS

Would Be Well for All to Remember That Loss of Time Can Never Be Made Up.

"Being late 15 minutes each day means a loss of nine and three-fourths eight-hour days in a year," points out S. W. Straus, president of the American Society for Thrift, in the Thrift Magazine.

"Even in these days of high-pressure efficiency far too little thought is given to the value of little things," the writer says. "A minute saved a day means a gain of six hours a year or almost one day of solid work. A minute saved every hour of an eight-hour day means 41 hours or five eight-hour days a year. A loss of half an hour a day means a sacrifice of 19⅛ days a year—or easily the equivalent of a good round vacation. And this is all time that might easily be saved.

"The most precious possession we have is time. Lost money may be regained, lost health may be recovered, even lost opportunities may serve as lessons of value. But the loss of time can never be made up. The little minutes that go by unimproved day by day mount into months and years of total losses.

"How few of us can truthfully say that we do not waste 20 minutes each work day. If we keep this up through a period of 30 years of active business life we will have cheated ourselves out of 400 working days of eight hours each. Make up your mind to stop the waste."

Birds Save the Apples.

Birds are much more effective in controlling certain pests than any other means. The codling moth, the worst pest of the orchard, destroys over a million dollars worth of apples every year, says the American Forestry Magazine of Washington. The little brownish moth lays its eggs on the newly formed apples shortly after the petals fall. During its entire life cycle there are but a few hours when the poison spray is effective and, inasmuch as all of the eggs do not hatch at exactly the same time, chances of killing all of the larvae are very slight. Birds keep after them all the time.

Deaths

Vivian T. Hanna was born at Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 17th, 1893. She associated her name with the M. E. church at Cheshire, O., when quite young. Came to Columbus in Jan. 1911, when her name was transfered to the West Park M. E. church of which she remained a member until May 9th, 1920 when her name was written in "God's Album The Book of Life."

She has gone to her Heavenly Home to reap her reward, leaving father, mother, brother and six sisters to mourn their loss.

Automatic Worker.

The newest hotel installation is a system of electric clocks embodying a call system which enables guests to call themselves at any desired hour. By simply setting an indicator at night, similar to an alarm clock, the automatic device rings a low musical chime at the desired hour in the morning. The clocks have luminous dials and hands so that the time can be read in the dark.

Gazing Speechlessly About Him.

monized with the tan of the walls and the curtains were crisply fresh.

"Oh, how nice!" exclaimed Rita; "but it's occupied, isn't it?" For an open magazine lay upon the couch and a basket of sewing stood on the table.

"It was up to fifteen minutes ago," replied Mrs. Garrity. "Then Miss Green, who had it, phoned me she was being married this noon. I don't take married couples. I make that understood. That's the fourth to leave for that reason this month. Have you a beau, my dear?"

Rita turned resentfully from her inspection of the room. So this was to be the fly in the ointment of such an attractive house—a nosey landlady! But Mrs. Garrity was proceeding: "I have a parlor; such a lovely parlor! It is always open to my roomers and their gentlemen friends."

"Why, yes; I have a friend," Rita found herself saying, "who will probably come to see me. We are not—that is—anyhow, if we're ever married it will not be till he is better established in his business." And for the telling of so much of her affairs to this perfectly strange person, whose concern it certainly was not, Rita was promptly ready to bite off her tongue.

"M-m-m!" commented Mrs. Garrity, with the air of a physician who understands the symptoms and is sure of the treatment.

It ended in Rita engaging the room. Five minutes after closing time in the big offices of the Underwood Insurance company she told Charlie Winters all about it. Charlie was waiting for her at the corner.

"Oh, blazes! And I've got to see you in a confounded public parlor with a lot of other couples sitting around, and everything! Why didn't you get into a private house, Rita? We're going to miss the comfort of your aunt's apartment, believe me."

"Who's going to miss it most?" demanded Rita. "I took the only decent room I could find—I've got to live in my room. Is it my fault that Aunt Belle moved West? If you don't want to come and see me, you needn't. If you do, it's 40 South avenue. There's my car!" And Rita departed abruptly.

Despite Charlie Winter's antipathy to rooming house drawing rooms, it was no later than the following evening that he presented himself at No. 40 and was ushered by Mrs. Garrity herself into the "lovely" parlor, which she left him to admire while she summoned Miss Hemingway. Rita found the young man standing rooted in the spot where Mrs. Garrity had left him, gazing speechlessly about him. She too, let her eyes roam about the apartment. They fell upon a green and yellow figured carpet, upon glaring red wallpaper forming background for crayon portraits of impossibly ugly human beings, upon two dusty artificial palms, upon feeble-looking chairs brightly gilded and decorated with tidies of varying materials and vintages, upon screaming plush, upon rioting varnish.

"Gee whiz!" breathed Charlie. "God bless our home!"

There were quick tears in Rita's eyes. "Oh, Charlie, isn't it awful? This is the first time I've seen it. I can't understand it at all—the rest of the house is—why, it's really and truly dear! But we could never stand this. I'll find another place tomorrow."

"Well, let's beat it out of here now, anyhow, and go to the movies," proposed Charlie. "Maybe we can dope out something before we get back."

For in five minutes that he had spent waiting for Rita, young Mr. Winters had learned something more than he had known about the life of a business girl.

It was on the way home from the film show that Charlie and Rita mutually agreed that it was all a mistake, this notion of waiting for by and by. They might not be able to start in their own bungalow, as Charlie had hoped, but they could give that horrifying parlor of Mrs. Garrity's a thousand-mile start and beat it to a frazzle. And what had to be done soon might as well be done now. So they made it the next day but one, and young Mrs. Winters sent for her things at Mrs. Garrity's after having been an occupant of 40 South avenue for just ninety-four hours.

"Five in five weeks!" exclaimed Mrs. Garrity complacently, as she shut the door after the expressman.

It was just a month afterward that there came to Rita Winters a flash of revelation concerning Mrs. Garrity's horrid parlor and its incongruity with the rest of that lady's pleasant house.

"Charlie Winters!" she exclaimed suddenly abandoning her grapefruit and sitting bolt upright, "I've just had an idea!"

"Nail it down, Duckie; we need 'em in our business."

"No; but really, listen. You know that Garrity woman where I lived when we were married? Well it just occurred to me. She made me sign a written agreement either to give her two weeks' notice before I left or pay her two weeks' rent. She said she always did that. And the girl who had the room before me—she left the same way. And I'll bet the next one did. Charlie, man, that's what she's got that awful, terrible parlor for!" And Rita went off into a gale of laughter.

"By hookey!" exclaimed Charlie, "I believe it's right. She must have a mint.

It's a great satisfaction, isn't it, to know that when you purchase an article, it's quality and it's price are above reproach?

You can buy such articles with quiet sureness. There will be no comebacks—no regrets—no trouble and wrangling and no doubtful merchandise. This, then, is the established reputation of our store. You can be sure.

"Everything I ever bought there was dependable," is often said of us and our way of doing business. And, in the long run, it pays. We keep our old customers—and we are constantly making new friends.

And the things you buy of a jeweler must be right. There should and can be no middle ground of worth. They are either right or wrong. Watches, cut glass, silver, rings, diamonds—all of these must measure up to a certain standard.

MRS. GARRITY'S PARLOR

By DORA MOLLAN

(©, 1918, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

South avenue in Rockhaven is essentially a street of respectable rooming houses. Rita Remingway, in search of a place to hang up her marmot coat, and so call "home," rang the bell at No. 8. Simultaneously, at No. 40, Mrs. Garrity turned with a satisfied sigh from her account book, which showed a substantial balance on the right side, to answer a ring at the phone.

Now No. 8 and No. 40 were almost a block apart, yet fate had ordained that Rita's fur wrap should find at least a temporary resting place in the clothes press of Mrs. Garrity's third-floor front. Therefore Rita rang the bell at 8 and the intervening bells as well, to no profit.

Mrs. Garrity was stout and placid. No one credited her with especial astuteness. Yet the reputation of her house was the envy of the street. It was well known that she rarely had a room vacant longer than a day. Yet she broke every established tradition of her competitors.

She turned down the cream of the trade, single men. She took only business girls and she allowed them many privileges. And she was the only landlady on the street who voluntarily sacrificed that plum of rooming house income—the rent of the front parlor. It could not be hired.

But Rita Hemingway was ignorant of all this when she rang Mrs. Garrity's bell. She only thought the outside appearance of the house neater than most of its neighbors and prayed that it might contain one unoccupied room sans green carpet and red wallpaper. She had seen a dozen such in the last hour.

There was a vacant room, Mrs. Garrity assured her caller. She led the way through neat halls, up two flights of immaculate stairs and into a room where the soft brown of the floor har-

WHITE GOODS AND PEGGY

By RAY LEWIS

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

In the interval of stock-taking, Peggy, wistful-eyed, piled up in neat stacks the snowy pillowcases and sheets and towels. Brown & Co., on whose weekly pay roll Peggy's salary appeared as a very small item, was having its annual white goods sale and it always stirred in Peggy's domestic heart longings for a home of her own. Her dreams of a home were liberally illustrated with pictures of well-stocked linen closets, exquisitely appointed dining tables and buffet drawers filled with finely laundered napkins and scarves and doilies. All the harder to bear were the dingy tablecloths and too seldom changed towels of her boarding house.

The way to make good these dreams was to marry. And all Peggy had to do to be married was to say, "Yes Henry." But she hadn't been able to bring herself to the point of saying, "Yes, Henry," because she wanted to say, "Yes, Jim." Yet how could one say yes to a question one had never been asked?

Henry was an assistant floor-walker and very popular with the girls on account of his clothes, his repartee and his willingness to "show them a good time." All of which characteristics Peggy admitted were excellent, but after all not the only ones essential for a good husband.

For instance, Jim at [illegible] s dressed shabbily, was far too quick with his tongue and hadn't ever shown her what the other girls would have considered much of a time at all. But whenever Peggy thought of Jim, she thought of him as a person who would "wear well," and what finer quality could the man have with whom you expected to pass from youth to old age?

But she had not seen Jim for several months—in fact, she had heard indefinitely that he had gone South.

As the short January day drew to a close and the lights twinkled throughout the store for the benefit of the hurrying shoppers, Peggy rested a headachy brow on her hand and tried to bring herself to a decision. She knew that Henry would be outside and that sometime during the walk home he would probably put his frequent question: "Well, old girl, when are you and me going to tie up?"

"Some Weather, All Right," Said Henry.

After the bell rang and Peggy had made up her books, she went to the dressing room, took down her coat and hat and walked slowly out into the chilly night. Henry was waiting at the corner.

"Some weather, all right," said Henry. "You ought to be wearing a regular fur coat, girlie. Well, one of these days—" and he winked significantly. Then: "Anything on for tonight?" he asked.

Peggy hesitated. "N-o-o," she said at last.

"Well, I'll be around about eight, and we'll talk a few things over. Got to leave you here to see a man." He lifted his hat with elaborate courtesy and turned down a side street.

Peggy felt a sense of respite, but after all, she reflected, it was only for a couple of hours. Then she was going to say, "Yes, Henry."

Eight o'clock brought Henry, his sleek hair brushed to a line, a carnation in his buttonhole.

And he didn't waste any time in preliminaries. "Ready to set the day, Peggy?" he asked the moment he had established himself in the least uncomfortable armchair the boarding-house parlor afforded.

"I don't know," hesitated Peggy. "course I want to get married some day and have a home."

"Sure you do," said Henry, "and here's the man that will get one for you—a couple of furnished rooms as a starter, and some day a regular swell apartment."

Peggy involuntarily burst forth: "Oh, Henry, not furnished! Couldn't we do that ourselves?"

"Spend a lot of money for stuff when you can hire it twice as cheap. Nix on that, girl. Us for the furnished rooms and our meals out."

Peggy saw her reasons for marrying Henry gradually disappearing. But she reminded herself that it wasn't possible she would be willing to marry him just for a home.

"Come, now, be a good girl and say you'll marry me!" pleaded Henry. Peggy looked very desirable as she sat opposite him, her hands folded, her eyes the color of velvet pansies, her lips tremulous.

Peggy sighed. Perhaps any old home was better than no home at all. Bravely she prepared to say the words which she knew would bring Henry's arms about her. "Well," she began slowly.

The doorbell rang violently. Peggy jumped up to open the door, not sorry for the interruption. On the step stood a tall, broad-shouldered person who smiled with evident pleasure as he looked into Peggy's astonished face. It was Jim.

She brought him in and introduced him to Henry, whose face assumed the aspect of a very black thunder shower.

Peggy endeavored to keep the ball of conversation tossing lightly about but it always fell with a dull thud when thrown to Henry. In desperation Peggy said the first thing which came into her head: "What do you think of furnished rooms instead of a regular little home?"

Jim looked surprised. "That's funny you hit on that. I just went to look at a little bungalow today, big enough for two. I'm sick of furnished rooms."

"Are you going to be married?" asked Peggy.

"I want to be, but I don't know about the girl," said Jim, gloomily.

"Some here," growled Henry.

"Bungalows are lovely," said Peggy, hastily. It was bad enough having the two evidently trying to slit each other out, without becoming involved in personalities.

But presently Jim arose and held out his hand. "Wish me luck about the girl," he said. "I've got to go."

"Every bit of luck in the world, Jim," said Peggy, and if Jim wondered why the hand she gave him was cold or why her lips trembled as she spoke he gave no sign.

After he had gone, Peggy resolutely turned to Henry. "I'm sorry, Henry, but I can't marry you. It wouldn't be fair to do it just for—for a home."

Henry looked amazed, then disgusted, then angry. This little shopgirl to throw him over! He had wanted her, but now that she refused him he decided there were other fish in the matrimonial sea, and after a few short words, departed.

Peggy closed the door on Henry and stood a minute in the darkness of the hall. Jim hadn't made any attempt to plan to see her gain. Probably he never would.

Some one ran up the steps. "Henry must have forgotten something," she thought. But as she opened the door it was Jim who faced her.

"Peggy," he said, managing to secure both her hands, "I knew the only way to get rid of that fellow was for me to beat it first. "I've been holding down the side steps of this house, waiting for him to go. Peggy, darling, I have been trying to make good just to be able to say to you, 'Will you marry me?' I think I am solidly on my feet now. I love you to pieces dear. Will you marry me?"

Peggy didn't need to think. She had been ready for years. "Yes, Jim," she whispered.

And the very first thing Peggy bought with her meager savings for her wedding outfit was a damask tablecloth.

AS TO THE GREAT ADVENTURE

Comments by Theodore Roosevelt on the Duties of the Citizens of a Nation.

Only those are fit to live who do not fear to die; and none are fit to die who have shrunk from the joy of life and the duty of life. Both life and death are parts of the same Great Adventure. Never yet was worthy adventure worthily carried through by the man who put his personal safety first. Never yet was a country worth living in unless its sons and daughters were of that stern stuff which made them die for it at need; and never yet was a country worth dying for unless its sons and daughters thought of life, not as something concerned only with the selfish evanescence of the individual, but as a link in the great chain of creation and causation, so that each person is seen in his true relations as an essential part of the whole, whose life must be made to serve the life of the whole. Therefore it is that the man who is not willing to die, and the woman who is not willing to send her man to die, in a war for the great cause, are not worthy to live. Therefore it is that the man and woman who fear or ignore the primary and vital duties and the high happiness of family life, who dare not beget and bear and rear the life that is to last when they are in their graves, have broken the chain of creation, and have shown that they are unfit for companionship with the souls all ready for the Great Adventure.—Theodore Roosevelt in The Great Adventure.

McCALL PATTERNS

Cussins & Hartsough Broad & Oakley Hilltop 550

Warmed-Over Beans.—Put into a hot frying pan some of the pork cooked with the beans. When the fat is melted and hot pour in the beans; add a little hot water and set back where the beans will heat slowly. Fold over like an omelet and serve with savory tomato sauce or tomato catsup. Garnish with parsley.

Graham Cracker Sandwiches.—Mix together chopped nuts, raisins and lemon juice; heat through, cool and spread on graham crackers. Press lightly together and crisp in a moderate oven.

Egg Sauce.—Cook two eggs until hard in the shell. Shell and chop and add to the above white sauce, using one tablespoonful each of flour and butter. Add a bit of onion juice and chopped parsley.

Bordeaux Pudding.—Cut sponge cake into three layers, spread with jam, put together again, cover with whipped cream, sweetened and flavored and sprinkle with chopped nuts. Serve on a platter.

Calf's Brain Salad.—Parboil the brains in acidulated water, cool and remove all membranes. Break in pieces and mix with half the quantity of finely cut celery. Add mayonnaise and serve on lettuce leaves.

Liver With Onion Sauce.—Dredge slices of liver with seasoned flour and fry brown in pork fat. Put the liver on a warm platter. Fry a cupful of chopped onions in the remaining fat in the pan until a slight brown. Add a tablespoonful of vinegar and pour the sauce over the liver.

Olive Sauce.—Chop fine eight good sized olives and just before serving add to the following:

Brown Sauce.—Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of flour and a slice of minced onion, cook until dark in color. Add one cupful of brown stock; cook one minute and strain. A few drops of kitchen bouquet will add to the flavor and deepen the color.

Drawn Butter Sauce.—To four tablespoonfuls of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of flour, salt, pepper and cayenne to taste. Add one cupful of water and cook until thick. Half of the butter may be reserved and beaten into the sauce very slowly. This takes more time but it improves the sauce. To serve with fish add a tablespoonful or two of capers, or a few chopped pickles.

It Pays to Protect Your Car

More motor cars find their way to the junk heap because of neglect than as a result of hard service. It is misuse, more than use, that makes dingy, wheezy rattle-traps today of what a year ago or so were handsome, lustrous, smooth-running machines that reflected the pride of their owners as they sped about town and country, the embodiment of practical utility and luxurious comfort. The man who gets the most service with the least expense and trouble from his automobile is the man who gives it the proper care, which a beautiful and wonderful machine deserves. And proper care includes adequate housing when the car is not in use—a garage that will afford protection from the weather and extreme temperatures, safety from theft, and facilities for cleaning, oiling and making repairs.

We have a book called The Home Built Garage. If you contemplate building one, come out and get a book, and we will be glad to give you an estimate on the material necessary.

Hilltop Chautauqua

At a meeting to make arrangements for the Hilltop Chautauqua this summer, Mr. W. E. Dolby was chosen as Chairman, C. J. Kohn Secretary and M. H. Prior Treasurer. The Committee to look after a location for the meeting was also selected, consisting of Messrs. W. L. Milliken, H. G. Butler, T. C. Mitchell, L. M. Seiller and A. F. Elliott.

The Chautauqua meetings will be held, begining on July 21st, and ending July 27th. This is the first kind of meetings of this kind and the Hilltop is fortunate in being able to enjoy some of the best talent given in other assemblies.

Dunbar's Royal Dragoons, a singing band of 18 pieces, and the great American comedy, "It Pays to Advertise," are two of this season's Hilltop Chautauqua headliners that are worth the entire price of a ticket for the week. This is the belief of the local committee, thru whom the Redpath Company has just announced some of the stars of the seven-day program.

Music lovers will be especially pleased, for the Chautauqua is to bring the College Singing Girls, the Great Lakes String Quartet, the New York Opera Singers, a skilled violinist and harpist, and other vocal and instrumental stars.

In the lecture field the program offers Roscoe Gilmore Stott, humorous writer and speaker; Detective Harry J. Loose, of Chicago; Dr. Robert MacGovern of Pittsburg and Sir John Foster Fraser of London, England. Adrian M. Newens is to give his interpretation of "To Him That Hath."

Pamahasika's Pets are scheduled for Chautauqua's last afternoon. Children, especially, will enjoy the 40 trained birds and animals. Domestic and tropical birds, ordinary house cats, an educated pony, a monkey comedian and other phenomenal pets are to be presented. For this performance alone the Redpath Chautauquas are to carry nearly a ton of baggage, as well as a trainer and two assistants.

Chautauqua is to close with Joy Night, under the leadership of Ethel Hinton, comedienne, and "Her College Gang."

Mrs. Grace Hamilton Morrey, president of the Morrey School of Music and head of the piano department, announces the appointment of Miss Alma Volp as a regular member of the piano faculty of the Morrey School. Miss Volp, formerly of Grove City, but now residing at 278 North Warren avenue, has been a pupil of Mrs. Morrey and is thoroughly trained and well groomed in her musical work. She has pursued her studies most diligently, with splendid results, and is unusually well fitted to become a teacher under Mrs. Morrey's exacting standards of pianistic musicianship. Miss Volp has been for several years, one of Mrs. Morey's brilliant artist-pupils, and has appeared with success and distinction in the annual formal presentation recitals of her distinguished artist-teacher. Miss Volp was unanimously elected to faculty membership by the executive board of the Morrey School.

Miss Volp, only 19 years old, is the youngest member of the faculty and has a few more hours to devote to her Hilltop class.

Miss Louise Henry of 287 North Ogden avenue, is one of Miss Volp's Hilltop pupils.

Why Do People Wake Up Only Half Rested?

All day long you are drawing on your nervous force stored up during sleep. Then, you go to bed, and nature begins storing up fresh energy for to-morrow. When you wake up only half rested you haven't had the right kind of sleep.

If you have any trouble in sleeping soundly — probably your bed is at fault.

A "SIMMONS" Iron or Brass Bed will induce sound sleep--they're noiseles; and Simmons Springs are always resilient and restful. They never sag or hump. That is why people sleep so much better in a Simmons Bed and Spring than any other.

Step in and let us show you the difference in Simmons beds, all finishes.

ALONG CAME JIM

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD.

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It certainly was a problem—this knowing what to do when you were a sweet girl graduate of a week's standing, with three positions in the offing to choose from. Should she teach French in the local high school, become an assistant matron in the distant city home for wayward girls or take the job of private secretary to the senior member of a well-known law firm? There they were—three excellent opportunities, any one of which a girl might be glad to seize.

And, oh, to be sure, incidentally, there was yet one more—namely, a position as wife of James Kittredge Stuart, good-looking, rapidly rising, a very devoted friend of long standing. But Barbara curled her lip at the thought of following up her years and years of study by—marriage. What a comedown! Any girl could be married, but ahead of her, Barbara saw unconquered fields accessible to only the equipped few.

She hadn't seen Jim for some time—not since the Ivy Night dance when he had asked her for the fifth and, according to him, the final time, to marry him.

"It may not be the modern idea, sweetheart," he had urged as they stood in the lantern-hung balcony between dances, "but I've a queer notion that I'd like to have you step from your father's home into mine—ours—without the intervening knocking up against the world so many girls think essential today."

Barbara brought her thoughts back to the present. It might not be a bad idea to ask Jim's advice in her dilemma. It really was one thing in Jim's favor that he was so dependable—always at hand when she wanted him. Stretching out a slim arm, she detached the receiver of the telephone on the stand, gave the number, and, as the answer came, wondered why Jim's voice, low and deep, always sent a thrill over the wire.

Brought Her Thoughts Back to the Present.

"Jim, can't you come up some evening? I've got to decide which of three positions to take and want your advice. * * * This evening? Good * * * What—you have a fourth position for me? Now, Jim——"

But either Jim had hung up or the connection was broken, and Barbara made no effort to get it back. She was a bit provoked. Why wouldn't Jim be serious? The fourth position, of course, was to marry him.

That evening, as Jim looked upon Barbara, slender and charming in some sort of a gray crepe de chine gown with suede slippers to match, he told himself that she was too altogether lovely to be even mentioned in the same breath with the pursuit of heathen gods and goddesses. But if he had expressed such a comment audibly, Barbara would not have comprehended its significance—until some time later in the evening.

If the girl observed the fact that Jim did not linger as long as usual over saying good evening, which involved holding her slim hand in greeting, and that he seated himself, not on the settle beside her, but in the wing chair some feet away, she gave no sign. Immediately she plunged into details regarding her three offers, while Jim listened attentively, interestedly, and gravely. As she finished, he nodded thoughtfully.

Then, "They're all right, any one of them, Barbara," he said slowly; "but how about this one of mine? True, it will involve considerable sacrifice at first, but I think I can assure you in the future—" he paused.

And Barbara, quite sure of the inevitable sixth proposal, put up a protesting, impatient hand. "Oh, Jim," she begged.

"Wait!" said Jim, imperturbably calm. "You've heard—me speak of Professor Alan, fraternity brother, etc.?"

Barbara nodded, puzzled.

she know but that she meant David some harm?

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Compton, but you will have to take me, too, if David is moved. It is a very bad thing to change nurses on any case unless absolutely necessary, and this patient is a very sick one."

"If it's the money you're afraid of losing, why I—"

The look of pain which took possession of Hannah's honest face stopped the other woman's sentence in midair, but she went on resolutely, determined to get David away at any cost.

"Of course, Miss Sawyer, since you've been so kind to David, I'll be pleased to have you go home with us to visit, but I'm a pretty fair nurse myself."

Hannah was quite unmoved by this thrust and went about arranging to be away from her boarding house for a time. When David was able to be removed in an ambulance to Mrs Compton's comfortable place outside the city Hannah Sawyer went with them.

For many days the sick man hovered between life and death, recognizing no one, and the two women vied with each other in trying to make him comfortable. Then one day the fever left him, he opened his eyes with intelligence gleaming from them once more and recognized not only his sister but the room in which he lay. That night Hannah packed her suitcase and went back to her boarding house without even announcing her departure.

She dreaded the question which she felt was sure to come from her little family of boarders, especially Joe Barton, but she braved the storm and appeared demurely in their midst as though she had been away only over night.

"Yes—oh, yes—Mr. Powell is much better—yes—he asked to be remembered to all of you." And thus the battle ended. To her surprise Joe Barton asked no questions, then or afterward until one day a few weeks later.

"Look here, Hannah; has that Powell fellow thrown you over? If he has, by the Lord Harry I'll—"

"Joe! How dare you!"

"Hannah, for the hundredth time, I beg you to let me fix to make your life a little easier—let me take you to a real home!"

"That's what I've come to do," a voice said simply, and David Powell stepped into the room as though he had but just left it. "Why did you run away, Hannah? I haven't written because I was afraid you might not answer my letters, so I waited until I could come for you. I told sister Sally I'd not return until I brought you with me, and she's waiting to welcome you. We'll be married tonight, and tomorrow we'll get back to the green trees and running brooks and bees and clover fields and—"

"Well," drawled Joe Barton, reaching for his hat, "I suppose this is what they call real romance in story books."

Shopping With Assurance

It's a great satisfaction, isn't it, to know that when you purchase an article, it's quality and it's price are above reproach?

You can buy such articles with quiet sureness. There will be no comebacks—no regrets—no trouble and wrangling and no doubtful merchandise. This, then, is the established reputation of our store. You can be sure.

"Everything I ever bought there was dependable," is often said of us and our way of doing business. And, in the long run, it pays. We keep our old customers—and we are constantly making new friends.

And the things you buy of a jeweler must be right. There should and can be no middle ground of worth. They are either right or wrong. Watches, cut glass, silver, rings, diamonds—all of these must measure up to a certain standard.

BIRD TALK

By R. RAY BAKER

(©, 1929, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Chirrup, chirrup," remarked the canary in the living room.

"Chirrup, chirrup," responded the canary in the dining room.

"Chirrup, chirrup," observed the canary in the kitchen.

"Chirrup, chirrup, chirrup, chirrup," echoed a chorus of canaries from the three bedrooms, the bathroom and the library.

There was a yellow bird for every room in Miss Elberta Bronson's big old house. They had possession.

"Auntie's canary crazy," Phoebe Hewitt, her niece, was wont to remark. "You can't turn around without running into a cage. Still, I rather like them myself."

Aunt Elberta raised the birds because she loved them. Frequently there were additions to her family of songsters, but she never parted with one of them.

Phoebe was sitting at the kitchen window, looking into the green forest which fringed the house at one side and the back. She was waiting for the water to heat so she could wash the dinner dishes. The telephone had called her aunt to town, a half-mile distant, on business matters, and Phoebe who spent the summers with her relative, had offered to put the house to rights.

As she sat there she fell into a reverie, and a little smile played about her full red lips, and something like a blush showed through the tan of her face. A shaft of sunlight, finding its way through the window, blended with her hair, which was of a soft yellow hue.

The blush was occasioned by her thoughts, which had to do with Philip Weldon, whom she expected to marry Amazed by What She Saw.

Philip had asked her and she had half consented. She had not fully promised, because—well, she was not quite sure that she loved him, and besides, it had been somewhat sudden. She had not suspected that Philip's affection went quite that deep.

There was no good reason why Phoebe should not marry Philip. He came of the wealthiest family in Sparksburg. Of course, that was not saying such a great deal, for Sparksburg was a small place, but the Weldons were the best family, socially and financially speaking, in the community. Besides, Philip had real culture; he was a college man and was only spending the summer at his home.

As Phoebe watched from the window she saw something that brought her out of her abstraction. The something was a young man, unusually big of build, garbed in rather rough garments, who was sauntering along the nearby path, a camera dangling from a strap round his shoulder.

"Jeff Cummings," she said, and just then he looked toward the house, raised his hat to her and walked on, his pace quickening slightly. Phoebe nodded, but that was all.

Jeff was the only man besides Philip who had ever played a very important part in her life. She had become acquainted with him the previous summer and they had spent many hours together roaming the woods, a pastime they both enjoyed greatly.

Jeff also was a college man, but his alma mater was an agricultural school instead of a university, like Philip's. His parents lived on a big farm and were fairly well to do.

The only objection Phoebe had had to Jeff was his uncouth ways. She more than half-suspected that they were put on—that he delighted in old clothes and rough speech. On several occasions, in fact, he had surprised her with a flow of perfect language, but his always was when he was discussing nature, which seemed to be a strong hobby with him.

When the present summer had begun Philip had been the first of the two to come home from school, and he took a fancy to Phoebe at the start. A month later Jeff appeared, and then occurred the event that caused the rupture of relations between him and Phoebe. The event was a futile encounter between Jeff and Philip, in which the latter was badly worsted. Phoebe detested displays of brute violence, and when she learned that the fight had been in some way connected with her she promptly notified Jeff that his attentions were no longer desirable.

Phoebe sat in thought for a moment after Jeff disappeared into the woods, but the singing of the tea kettle told her the water was sufficiently warm for the dishes, and she went to work. She had only got nicely started, however, when there came a knock at the kitchen door, and when she opened it Philip Weldon, smiling and immaculate, carrying a rifle, stood there.

"Going into the woods—hunting," he announced. "Want to come along?"

She pointed to the stack of dishes.

"Can't," she told him. "What are you going to hunt?"

"Oh, anything; probably nothing. I just carry this little weapon for companionship. See you on the way back, maybe."

He left and Phoebe rattled the dishes somewhat piqued. Jeff had aided in washing dishes more than once; but, then, Jeff was uncouth—and he was a fighter, a ruffian. Philip's culture had no place in dish water.

As Phoebe finished the dishes her aunt came back, sputtering something about "outrageous fees charged by lawyers." She forgot about business worries, however, and began a tour of inspection of her pets.

"You poor dears," she told the canaries. "You've been shut up in those stuffy little cages all day. You're going to have a little freedom."

Kindness was Miss Bronson's outstanding virtue. Every day the canaries were given the liberty of the house for an hour, so they could stretch their wings, as she phrased it.

While her aunt was freeing the birds Phoebe went to her room to change her dress. She had just completed the change when Miss Bronson burst into the room, shaking with excitement.

"Hurry, Phoebe!" she cried. "The birds have flown away into the woods. I forgot the kitchen window was open, and they've all gone."

A moment later Phoebe was running through the woods in one direction and her aunt in another. The girl glimpsed a splash of yellow in the foliage, but it changed its perch every time she came up with it.

She ran on and on, coming presently to a dense part of the woods.

"Chirrup, chirrup!" said a familiar

It Pays to Protect Your Car

More motor cars find their way to the junk heap because of neglect than as a result of hard service. It is misuse, more than use, that makes dingy, wheezy rattle-traps today of what a year ago or so were handsome, lustrous, smooth-running machines that reflected the pride of their owners as they sped about town and country, the embodiment of practical utility and luxurious comfort. The man who gets the most service with the least expense and trouble from his automobile is the man who gives it the proper care, which a beautiful and wonderful machine deserves. And proper care includes adequate housing when the car is not in use—a garage that will afford protection from the weather and extreme temperatures, safety from theft, and facilities for cleaning, oiling and making repairs.

We have a book called The Home Built Garage. If you contemplate building one, come out and get a book, and we will be glad to give you an estimate on the material necessary.

Samuel J. Tilden was the first presidential candidate who used an immoderate amount of money. He was the wealthiest nominee that either party ever had, "Girard" writes in the Philadelphia Press.

During his campaign "Sammy's barrel" was a big issue. It was then that "barrel" came to have a sinister meaning and referred of course to a barrel of cash for political purposes.

It seems probable that Tilden spent more of his own money to be elected president than was spent out of the pockets of all the presidents since his time.

Washington was our richest president, but he was hardly a millionaire. Most of them were not worth $100,000.

voice, and she saw the bird perched on a limb of a high tree. At this point the path entered a small clearing, bending first around a clump of bushes. The tree on which the canary had refuge was in the clearing.

Resolved to find some way of apprehending the fugitive, although she had no idea what it would be, Phoebe stole cautiously around the bushes. As she was about to step into the clearing she stopped, startled, amazed by what she saw.

Philip Weldon was standing there, the butt of his gun at his shoulder, the barrel pointed at the splotch of yellow in the tree.

She thought she could see Philip's finger curving on the trigger, but the shot was not fired. A long arm reached over his shoulder and wrested the gun from his grasp, and a big fist flashed out and caught the young hunter on the jaw, sending him prostrate on the ground.

The newcomer on the scene was Jeff Cummings. With a flirt of his wrist he hurled the rifle into the bushes, and then he directed his attention to the bird that had been a curious observer of proceedings.

"Chirrup, chirrup," said Jeff.

As Phoebe watched, the noise was repeated, and presently the canary fluttered from its perch and settled itself on Jeff's extended forefinger. He patted the pet tenderly and carefully placed it in a pocket of his coat.

Phoebe stepped into the clearing and Jeff saw her. He looked confused, almost guilty.

"I just picked up one of your aunt's canaries," he said, with forced gruffness. "I got it in my pocket here, along with two others I came across back in the woods."

"All of them got out," was all Phoebe could muster words to say.

"We'll try to get 'em out," he returned. "Do you want to go with me or would you rather—"

He nodded toward Philip, who was sitting up, looking dazed. She took Jeff's arm.

Brains, Oyster Style.—Prepare the brains as in the above directions, separate into serving-sized pieces, dip each in beaten egg, then roll in flour or crumbs and fry in hot fat until a golden brown. Serve with cold slaw.

Brains a la Newberg.—Cut the prepared brains into one-inch pieces. Place one cupful of thick, rich white sauce in a chafing dish with the brains, add two tablespoonfuls of butter or any substitute; season with salt and pepper, with a dash of lemon juice. Heat to the boiling point, stirring to keep from scorching, add a beaten egg and when well mixed serve at once on toast.

Brains Omelet.—Dice about a cupful of brains that have been prepared and cooked, melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add the brains, stir a few minutes, add three tablespoonfuls of cream, season with salt and pepper. Make an omelet, using four eggs, place the brains in the center and roll into shape. Serve at once.

Pork Brains Cutlets.—Prepare the brains; then put through a food chopper, using the coarse knife; add to the brains one cupful of thick cream sauce, one-half cupful of bread crumbs and season with salt, pepper and a little lemon juice. Mix well and pour out on a large platter to cool. When cold

WORRIED OVER OLD H. C. O. L.

How One Man Many Years Ago Worked Out a "Solution" of Present-Day Problem.

It is a curious fact that the high cost of living seems to have been a topic of conversation from the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. Every age produces alike its lamentations and its theoretical solutions of this problem. But few men have been so ingenious as to classify all the causes under 12 headings, as did the anonymous author of a mid-eighteenth century pamphlet entitled: "An Attempt to Discover the Cause of the Dearness of Provisions and High Price of Labor in England."

According to this analyst, the causes reduce themselves to the following: The enormous size of the metropolis, monopoly, sample markets for grain, large farms, plowing with horses instead of oxen, post chaises and flying stages, exportation of grain, taxes on necessities, tithes, public funds, increase of money and rapid fortunes, decrease of industry among women, the want of a better plan for the militia, the want of proper poor laws.

Many of his items appear familiar to us today. Some of them, indeed, are our own pet reasons for the high cost of living. But what on earth had plowing with horses to do with the case? Or, for that matter, post chaises and rapid communication by means of stage coaches? Perhaps, however, in another 170 years some of our explanations may seem equally ridiculous.—Christian Science Monitor.

Onion Sandwich.—Chop a mild onion very fine; add vinegar, a little oil, salt and pepper to taste. Spread on buttered bread and serve as a Sunday night lunch, after church.

Onion Soup.—Take one cupful of onion puree, that is cooked onion put through a sieve. Mix one tablespoonful of butter and flour together, add three cupfuls of milk and when scalding hot stir in the puree. Cook for a few minutes to cook the flour, add a well beaten egg mixed with half a cupful of cold milk and when hot, not boiling, serve.

Lemon Syrup.—Boil one cupful of sugar with one-fourth cupful of water until it threads. Add to this the juice of six and thinly grated rind of two lemons. Let all scald, but do not boil. Strain and bottle. When wanted for use add a spoonful to a glass of cold water.

The Straphanger

The sixty per cent increase has not lessened the strain on the straps.

Wonder how many people walk now who used to ride?

The strap is a prime essential. What with a rough track and a rougher motorman, the straphanger clings fervently to the friendly strap.

The trouble with the railroads is deeper than mere shortage of cars. There morale is broken.

The indifference of the public at large in the solution of the railroad question is at last penetrating into the railroad organization itself. The railroads have been underpaid for years but the public refused to see it.

Why should not an ordinance be passed compelling all theaters and motion picture houses to close or show their pictures free on the Sabbath day? is this not an easy solution to a difficult problem?

The more enterprising picture houses would gladly do this as a means of increasing their popularity throughout the week.

You say the motion picture houses could not take care of their crowds? Oh yes, they could. This would make church going more popular.

Every picture film shown on Sunday should be sacred, patriotic or educational.

The church is at a disadvantage in being next door to a movie and a gas filling station.

IN MEMORIAM

Harry L. White who died one year ago, May 29, 1919.

If we had seen you at the last,
And held your dying hand;
And heard the last sigh from your heart,
We would not feel so bad.

We did not know the pain you bore,
We did not see you die,
We only know you went away,
And never said goodbye.

We loved you. Oh, no tongue can tell,
How we loved you and how well;
But God loved you too and saw 'twas best,
To take you home with him to rest;
The shock was severe and hard to bear,
But we trust in the Lord to meet you there.

The entertainment given by the Westminster Guild at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church last Friday evening was well attended and greatly enjoyed by all who were there.

Mrs. Pocock completely captivated her audience in the readings she gave, "The Highwayman," "The Light Keeper," and "Some Other Birds Are Taught To Fly," each of which was splendidly given in her simple, yet entertaining way.

Mrs. Shields, Miss Zella White and Mrs. Heid each sang several solos; Mr. Kilworth entertained with piano solos, and Miss King played two numbers on the Hawaiian guitar.

It is to be hoped the friends and admirers of Mrs. Pocock will have the privilege of hearing her at some future time.

Church Doings

HIGHLAND AVENUE FRIENDS CHURCH

Sabbath School, 9:15 a. m.
Meeting for worship, 10:30 a. m.
Gospel service at 8:00 p. m. Subject: "The Future of This World, in the Light of Scripture."
Christian Endeavor at 7:00 p. m.

HILLTOP CHURCH OF CHRIST

A. M. Topic: "Echoes of the Convention."
P. M. Stereopticon Lecture on the Leper, by Geo. King.
Last Sunday the Bible School raised $170 for the building fund. The fund now amounts to $3,091.61 cash in hand. We had set the amount at $100 for the day, but we went away over the mark.

HILL CREST BAPTIST CHURCH

Steel and Eldon Aves.

A. E. Cowley, Pastor.
Sunday School, 9:30.
Morning worship at 10:30; preaching by pastor, "America's Greatest Memorial Day."
Evening service, 7:45. The pastor will give "The Baptism of Jesus in Picture and Story." This is an exceptional opportunity to see and hear something worth while.
Wednesday evening prayer meeting at eight o'clock.
A hearty welcome is accorded to all strangers. Especially do we desire all Baptists on the hill to work and worship with us. In the last 18 months of the present pastorate the membership of this church has doubled. About a third of these additions have been men. Why is this? There's a reason. Come and find out by giving us a trial.
Juniors will meet at 6:30 Sunday, May 30, to have a union meeting of Juniors and Seniors. Ella Withrow, leader. All Juniors and Seniors come! We want a good crowd from both societies.

HOGE MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

9:15 a. m., Bible School meets. We are getting ready for Children's Day. Be on hand.
10:30 a. m., morning worship and sermon: "Self-Determination in Religion." Children's sermon: "Story of a Little Spanish Girl."
6:30 p. m., Senior C. E. meets. Subject, "Being a Good Comrade."
7:30 p. m., special sermon on the story of the life of W. W. Wentworth —"That Something." This book is sent throughout the country by the Rotary Clubs. Come out and hear the story and find out how to get "that something" which makes life successful and happy. A true story; a Christian story; a modern parable of the Prodigal Son. We welcome you.

"The Future of this World in the Light of Scripture" will be the subject for the pastor at

Highland Ave. Friends Church

SUNDAY, 8:00 P. M.

Come and hear what the Bible has to say on this vital subject which so concerns each of us, and have some of the questions in your mind settled.

THE HILLTOP EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH

10:30, morning service. Baptism, confirmation and Holy Communion.
All members are urged to be present. The public is invited to worship with us.

ST. PAUL UNITED EVANGELICAL

Morning worship with communion service at 10:30 a. m. Rev. H. V. Summers will preach.
Intermediate Endeavor at 6:30 p. m. Subject: "Being a Good Comrade."
Evangelistic service at 7:30 p. m. Rev. Elmer Starr will preach.
Regular prayer meeting on Wednesday evening at 7:30.
How are you spending these beautiful Sabbath days? God says, remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Come and worship with us Sunday.

GLENWOOD METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Preaching service at 10:30. The morning sermon will be on "Our Hope of Glory."
Epworth League at 7:00. The topic is: "Being a Good Comrade." The Junior League will have charge of the service.
Evening services at 8:00. The evening sermon subject is "A Fitting Memorial." The veterans of all wars are cordially invited to attend.
Mid-week prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 8:00.
The regular meeting of the Standard Bearers will be held at the home of Miss Sarah Westlake, 2499 West Broad Street, Friday evening, June 4th, at 7:30. The president desires that all members be present to hear the District Superintendent, Mrs. Ackland, talk on the hospital work.
The Ladies' Aid Society will meet at the church Thursday, June 3d, at 2 p. m. The ladies of the Third Division will serve.

St. John's Lutheran

Services in the morning only. Commemoration of the Trinity. Pastor's topic, "The New Birth."
The Men's meeting with Mr. Adam Bruckelmeyer, 333 S. Warren Ave., has been postponed until Tuesday evening, June 8th.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST

There will be a very unique service at the church Sunday afternoon at three o'clock in the ordination of four newly-elected deacons which is an unusual service in the Baptist Church. All the Baptist pastors of the city will take part in the interesting program. Dr. Rittenhouse will preach the sermon, and Dr. Phillips will give the charge to the new officers, and Mrs. Dr. Phillips will give the charge to the deacons' wives and Dr. Colborn will offer the ordination prayer with the laying on of hands by deacons of other Baptist Churches. The two choirs will lead in the singing. The people of the Hilltop are cordially invited. Dr. Robbins will address the Baptist ministers Monday at ten o'clock at the Hotel Norwich on the theme: "Immortality."

---

Miss Edith L. Robbins and her partner, Miss Ethel Greiser, will arrive in the city next week and about the fifteenth of the month will open a branch of The Robbins and Greiser School of Music, taking a limited number of pupils for a summer term in piano, violin and elocution, at 89 Midland avenue.

URANUS

By R. RAY BAKER.

(©, 1930, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

On the peak of Monteith mountain Gordon Winslow sat and discovered stars, and measured the tails of comets, and determined the density of celestial solids, and found spots on the sun.

Almost any time of day or night Gordon could be found looking into the reflectors of the big telescope. An enthusiastic star gazer and student was Gordon Winslow, just out of college with his degree.

However, it must not be supposed that Gordon had no interests on the terrestrial globe. He had a number of such interests, and one in particular had to do with the Summit hotel, where Jonas Hardwell reigned as proprietor and his daughter held sway as a breaker of young men's hearts. Gordon's was among those that had been crushed, and at times when he was watching some distant world and calculating the number of millions of miles it was from the earth his mind would wander and he would speculate as to the difficulties "the prof" was meeting in the solution of a knotty sidereal problem.

Well, it was a knotty problem—how to get back into the favor of Helen Hardwell, for to get back he was determined. Gordon had been in her good graces only a few months ago—more than her good graces. They had been practically engaged, but relations had been broken because a dance at the Summit house and an observation of Mercury were scheduled for the same night. Gordon enjoyed dancing, especially when Helen was his partner, but it was his duty to turn his telescope on the planet, which was in a position most favorable for terrestrial inspection.

"Very well," said Helen. "If you care more for your old star than for me, go ahead. I can find a partner."

That was the last time they had been together. Helen at once began weaving her charms about the rich young men resorting at the hotel, and soon she had nearly as many satellites as Saturn, which boasts of eight in addition to its rings.

Gordon wondered if Helen missed the telescope, at which she had sat many an evening, listening to his discourses on the universe. Surely she must, he decided, for she had displayed enthusiasm over astronomy. If both of them had not possessed more than their share of stubbornness, it is likely they would have effected a reconciliation; that is, before the wealthy satellites began exerting their influence.

"Please Don't Be Angry With Me."

Early in December Gordon became interested in a celestial phenomenon. Six of the planets were maneuvering in their orbits so they would be aligned on the same side of the sun. By astronomical and arithmetical deductions Gordon figured that on December 17 Mercury, Venus, Jupiter, Saturn and Neptune would form a conjunction, while far on the other side of the sun Uranus would hold forth, an outcast. Off at a tangent from the lined-up planets would be the earth.

Gordon was not the only astronomer waiting for the conjunction. In fact, some of them predicted storms, earthquakes and other phenomena on the earth due to the strong gravitative pull to which the sun and earth would be subjected. These predictions were exaggerated by excitable persons until it became generally known that the end of the world was scheduled for December 17.

Gordon smiled at these prophecies of disaster, but said nothing. He had no fears for the safety of the globe which was his home, for he knew the same conjunction of heavenly bodies had occurred before, although not within the last few thousand years.

The settlement on the mountain was agog with excitement as a result of the predictions, which they read in the papers. The superstitious were worried; others were interested because of the diversion, while others became enthusiastic because of some scientific germ that existed in them.

Gordon watched the planets maneuver for alignment, but kept silence, although the settlement was waiting to hear from him. It is not many villages that can boast of an authority on planets.

As he studied the heavens Gordon unconsciously placed himself in the position of Uranus. He was an outcast from Helen Hardwell's affections; he was alone, far at one side, while her rich admirers he referred to as Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn and Neptune. They were pulling together for her.

On the night of December 16 about eleven o'clock, Gordon sat in his study reading. There was no particular reason to watch the skies, because the planets were on the other side of the earth and would not be visible to him until shortly before sunup.

Gordon had a book on economics before him. However, he did not read long. Dreams of Helen Hardwell interfered.

He heard the door creak and looked toward it, to see Helen standing there, smiling.

"Please don't be angry with me"

It's a great satisfaction, isn't it, to know that when you purchase an article, it's quality and it's price are above reproach?

You can buy such articles with quiet sureness. There will be no comebacks—no regrets—no trouble and wrangling and no doubtful merchandise. This, then, is the established reputation of our store. You can be sure.

"Everything I ever bought there was dependable," is often said of us and our way of doing business. And, in the long run, it pays. We keep our old customers—and we are constantly making new friends.

And the things you buy of a jeweler must be right. There should and can be no middle ground of worth. They are either right or wrong. Watches, cut glass, silver, rings, diamonds—all of these must measure up to a certain standard.

ROMANCE AND HANNAH

By KETURAH VAN TYLE.

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"The place for sick people without any folks is in the hospital, Hannah."

"That may be, Joe, but Mr. Powell has been paying me good money for his place here ever since I came to the city and took this rooming house. I can't turn him out, now that he's sick just because he's lost his position. Hospitals don't take people without money, either."

"It's not up to you, is it, to stand for David Powell's bills? He's almost a stranger. Hannah, you'll never have a cent in this world until you begin to think of yourself first and the rest of the world afterward. Romance is all right in story books, but it never gets one anywhere. What you need is some one to look after you. How about giving me that honor?"

A scarcely perceptible shadow crossed the woman's face, but she smiled sweetly just the same, hoping to remove any sting as she answered Joe Barton—prosy, thrifty Joe, whom she had been refusing regularly since her pinafore days.

"Romance may not be for me, Joe, but I wouldn't marry the best man on earth unless I honestly loved him. I'll get along all right. Now I'm going to take David Powell his supper."

Barton, sensing his usual dismissal, lighted his cigar and went out.

The expression on Hannah Sawyer's face was tenderly beautiful as she opened the door of David Powell's room and slipped quietly over to his bedside; but it changed quickly to one of alarm as she found the sick man moaning in delirium and burning with fever. She was successful in getting a physician there in a very short time but his ultimatum set Hannah to guessing.

"He'll pull through all right, but he must have the best of care and a diet of good milk and perfectly fresh eggs. Has he any people?"

"Not a soul that I know of."

"Then I should advise the County hospital at once. I'll see if I can get him in."

When he had gone Hannah set her teeth together after manner of determined womanhood, and vowed he should not go to any hospital if it took the last cent she had in all the world to care for him. Fresh eggs were surely a problem, but she knew she could solve it in some way. The little teacher from the mission school had told her of a woman who came there twice a week with fresh supplies, so Hannah fared forth to the mission fortified with the first withdrawal from her savings account.

"I'll be only too glad to let you have them," said Mrs. Compton, the woman from the country, "especially if they're for a sick man. I always feel maybe it might be my brother sick and alone in this awful city."

"Of course. Mr. Powell will never—"

"Powell? Quick—what's his first name?"

"Why, David—to be sure—why?"

"Please, Miss Sawyer, I must go home with you at once—the sick man must be Davie—my little brother—that ran away so long ago because father insisted on his being a preacher!"

The two women and the fresh eggs arrived safely at Miss Sawyer's boarding house, and Mrs. Compton insisted that the sick man was her brother, whom she feared might long ago have died. David was too ill to recognize any one but Hannah, to whom he held out his hands appealingly.

"I must get him home—into the country at once, Miss Sawyer," insisted Mrs. Compton, but Hannah was not to be set aside so easily. She had nursed David Powell carefully and consistently ever since he had been taken ill and she relished not at all this woman's interference. How did she know but that she meant Davie some harm?

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Compton, but you will have to take me, too, if David is moved. It is a very bad thing to change nurses on any case unless absolutely necessary, and this patient is a very sick one."

"If it's the money you're afraid of losing, why I—"

The look of pain which took possession of Hannah's honest face stopped the other woman's sentence in midair, but she went on resolutely, determined to get David away at any cost.

"Of course, Miss Sawyer, since you've been so kind to David, I'll be pleased to have you go home with us to visit, but I'm a pretty fair nurse myself."

Hannah was quite unmoved by this thrust and went about arranging to be away from her boarding house for a time. When David was able to be removed in an ambulance to Mrs. Compton's comfortable place outside the city Hannah Sawyer went with them.

For many days the sick man hovered between life and death, recognizing no one, and the two women vied with each other in trying to make him comfortable. Then one day the fever left him, he opened his eyes with intelligence gleaming from them once more and recognized not only his sister but the room in which he lay. That night Hannah packed her suitcase and went back to her boarding house without even announcing her departure.

She dreaded the question which she felt was sure to come from her little she pleaded. "I know I'm intruding; but I have just got to learn something about that—the—the end of the world."

"The town is just crazy about the big show the planets are going to put on," she continued, advancing into the room somewhat timidly. "Are there really going to be earthquakes and things? Up at the dance at the hotel the folks are waiting for me. You see, they sent me as a delegation of one to find out what's going to happen. You won't let me return and report failure, will you, Gordon?"

Gordon stood up, smiling.

"Certainly not, Helen. You're welcome to all the information I can give. It is said that such a conjunction of planets will cause sun spots. If that is true there will be sun spots as the result of the present situation in the solar system. It also is said that sun spots cause storms and earthquakes. If that theory is correct, there certainly will be storms and earthquakes as a result of the alignment of the spheres."

She seated herself and he did likewise.

Gordon," she said, "I'm an awfully stubborn girl, but you see I'm yielding. I'm sick of the bunch at the hotel. They don't know anything except dancing and bridge, clothes and golf and tennis, and how to spend money they never earned. Tom Thatcher didn't even know the earth revolves around the sun until I told him. Fred Beakman thought the stars were five pointed, until I told him they are spheres. Sam Adams thought the earth was the biggest thing in the universe except the sun, until I explained that the planet Jupiter is more than a thousand times larger."

Gordon smiled again, whimsically.

"Tom Thatcher is Mars," he said "Sam Adams is Venus; and isn't he some Venus? I've named all your satellites after planets."

She flushed.

"I'm through with satellites," she told him. "I'm going to be like Venus and Mercury—without any moons. But how about yourself, Gordon? Haven't you a planetary name?"

"I'm Uranus, because I'm all alone on the other side of the sun, in the present arrangement of things. Uranus is an outcast from the solar system and I'm an outcast from you."

"Gordon," she said suddenly, "would it be very improper for me to stay here tonight and have a reserved seat at the big performance in the sky? You can help me to catch up on my lessons about the stars, and early in the morning we can see the planets together. I'm not going back to the hotel."

At the hotel the anxious crowd waited in vain for their emissary, while she sat at the telescope the whole night through.

In the morning she looked with awe as Jupiter, blue-white, burst into flames in the sky, while Saturn took on a dull orange hue and Mars sparkled red. Down in the sky, near the crescent moon, Venus appeared twice the size of an ordinary star, shining with an intense white light that rivaled Luna's, and close to the horizon little Mercury blinked.

The stars began to fade as the sun's rays shot over the horizon. Only Jupiter and Venus and the moon continued to shine.

"Oh, it's all so wonderful," Helen breathed, as tired from her long vigil, she turned from the telescope.

"You may be Uranus, an outcast," she whispered, "but you're all the world to me."

She nestled her head against Gordon. Her arms encircled his neck.

family of boarders, especially Joe Barton, but she braved the storm and appeared demurely in their midst as though she had been away only over night.

"Yes—oh, yes—Mr. Powell is much better—yes—he asked to be remembered to all of you." And thus the battle ended. To her surprise Joe Barton asked no questions, then or afterward until one day a few weeks later.

"Look here, Hannah; has that Powell fellow thrown you over? If he has, by the Lord Harry I'll—"

"Joe! How dare you!"

"Hannah, for the hundredth time, I beg you to let me try to make your life a little easier—let me take you to a real home!"

"That's what I've come to do," a voice said simply, and David Powell stepped into the room as though he had but just left it. "Why did you run away, Hannah? I haven't written because I was afraid you might not answer my letters, so I waited until I could come for you. I told sister Sally I'd not return until I brought you with me, and she's waiting to welcome you. We'll be married tonight, and tomorrow we'll get back to the green trees and running brooks and bees and clover fields and—"

"Well," drawled Joe Barton, reaching for his hat, "I suppose this is what they call real romance in story books."

Of Interest to People on the the Hilltop and Vicinity

Vol. 4. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, June 3, 1920 No. 7

The Straphanger

"And what is so rare as a day in June?
Then, if ever, come perfect days;
Then heaven tries the earth if it be in tune,
And over it softly her warm ear lays."

June is worth the price we paid. The month of roses, also candidates.

If there ever was a time when we would like to forget politics, it is now. No chance.

Candidates for president are expensive luxuries. Some backers are either extremely patriotic or very hopeful.

One would think the way great leaders are being deserted and sacrificed in these troublesome days, that few would have the audacity to risk the gibbet. Suppose each of them feel that the country must be saved at whatever risk or price.

Wilson has made the presidency very popular and himself very unpopular.

Pershing's Decoration Day appeal to America, has the truest ring of anything we have heard in months. Read it.

Do we appreciate the wonderful wealth of nature?
"Daily with souls that cringe and plot
We Sinais climb and know it not."

STRAP HANGER.

The baseball team representing Glenwood church have entered the North-West League. This league is composed of ten teams from the North and West sides. The first game for Glenwood will be on Saturday, June 5 at 3:30 P. M., on North field with Como as their opponents. The diamonds are located on King Avenue and Olentangy river. The scarcity of grounds necessitates the playing of these church games at a twilight hour. The eligibility list must be turned into Recreation Dept. Friday and a short meeting of the Glenwood team is called for Thursday at Highland and Broad, promptly at 7:00 o'clock. This meeting will only last a few minutes and if each player is on time, 7:30 will see the meeting closed. Be there you Tri-Mu baseballers.

CONTRIBUTED

When you read all the news that is printed each week,
And the doings and the "ads" of the Hilltop you seek;
When you read of the children so luckless and poor,
And you're glad that your pocketbook is so secure,
And you read all the stuff with a pitying grin,
That the poor would-be poet has proudly sent in—
Can't you stop just a moment and straighten that smile
And think of the editor once in a while.

If the columns you read every week make you curse,
Just think, he has picked them from those which are worse!
And the verses you read with their rythm so flat,
Are picked out from verses much poorer than that.
If you'd praise all the good as you knock all the bad;
You'd find there are many good things to be had.
Good deeds are immortal and so is a smile,
And so is an editor once in a while.

There's a great many ways if you just understood,
How to skip all the bad and to find all the good;
Though you may have knowledge and goodness and fame,
You may be what's rare, a success in the game.
And even a nation may give you its praise,
But you don't know it all by a blank of a ways;
And you'd read all the news with a satisfied smile—
If you'd think of the editor once in a while.

When these lines are published (we're hoping they are).
Don't think we are trying to hand you a jar;
We smile at the world and the world smiles at us,
And we never get tired of each other—not much.
The best advice we can give you in rhyme,
Is to try not to think of yourself all the time.
Even Washington and Lincoln knew how to smile—
And so does an editor—once in a while.

Daily Vacation Bible Schools

TWO SCHOOLS TO BE HELD

Two Daily Vacation Bible Schools will be held on the Hilltop during the coming summer. Beginning July 6th at 9:30 A. M. and lasting six full weeks children of the community will be entertained and taught in these schools. The program will include the following items: Health and Habit talks given by competent teachers specially secured for this purpose; the learning of good Christian hymns by memory; Bible stories (one every day for thirty days) and manual and industrial work in which all children delight. A specially trained kindergartner will have charge of the little folks between the ages of 3 and 7 years in a full and well rounded course of kindergarten training in addition to the Bible lessons for the smaller children. Boys will learn to make wood articles and all kinds of useful helps for mother and father, girls will be taught sewing and weaving of baskets and mats. Smaller children from age 7 to 10 will make kites, paper baskets, raffia articles and other kinds of articles. Picnic parties, recreation and play will take up some more of the hot, dusty tiresome summer days. Parents of children between the ages of 3 and 14 years are urged to make use of this unusual opportunity to give their children additional Bible and religious training (as much in these six weeks as in nine months of the Sunday School) and also to keep them in good surroundings under trained Christian teachers.

A Community School in which the Baptist and Presbyterian Churches will unite their efforts will be held at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church and another school will be conducted at Glenwood Methodist Episcopal church. A kindergarten will be held in each church and children of the communities will be taken care of by the best talent to be found. Parents tell your children, children tell your parents and COME. GOOD SINGING! GOOD STORIES! GOOD PLAY! Learn to be a CRAFTSMAN, BOYS! Learn to SEW, GIRLS!

Remember the date, July 6th! Teachers are leaders. Young people are invited to get in touch with their respective churches if they are willing to take a place in any one of these schools. These schools are among 15 schools to be held in Columbus during the summer.

A Shadow of the Past.

An English class at Technical high school had been instructed by the teacher to prepare an oral composition for the following day. Each member of the class was to assume that he was some well-known man, and tell the story of his life in the first person.

Everything went well until one boy made the sad mistake of choosing to tell about a well-known author, whose life is now past history.

"I was born on Friday, February 7, 1812," he began, "the place Landport in Portsea, England, and was known on the four winds as Charles Dickens."

"A fine beginning," commented the teacher.

And so would the whole recitation have been fine, had he not been forced to end with, "I died June 9, 1870, and was buried at ——." But the laughter of the class drowned out the place where he said he was buried.—Indianapolis News.

Japanese Development.

The Japanese Weekly Chronicle characterizes the contemplated establishment of a chamber of commerce in the Banshiu district of Japan as a remarkable development and quite a new departure in Japan, as far as rural districts are concerned. The increasing number of factories and commercial firms has resulted in the chiefs of the villages and towns considering the establishment of a sort of chamber of commerce with a view to conducting various investigations.

THE STEEL BARGE AND ARMY TRUCK

In 1905 there was made an appropriation of four and one-half million dollars to make a nine foot stage of water from Cairo to Pittsburg on the Ohio River. The Ohio river system embraces 4500 miles, draining six states, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Illinois. The improvement of the Ohio river is the only thing needed to make the valleys commercial supremacy still greater. Beginning with Pittsburg on the north with a tonnage of 87 million, with a coal output great as that of France, with an iron and steel production larger than that of Great Britian, with a steel rail output greater than that of Germany, with a pig iron production nearly as large as that of Russia and France.

Coming down the line we have E. Liverpool one of the greater pottery centers of the United States. We have Steubenville, with greatt mills. New Cumberland, Follansbee, Wellsburg making sewer pipe, tin plate and glassware; Wheeling, W. Va., great iron and steel plants. Below Wheeling we have Sistersville, New Martinsville and beautiful Marietta, Parkersburg and Huntington, Cincinnati the Queen City & Front Portsmouth. Evansville, Paducah and finally Cairo at the beginning of the great Ohio an thence to Mississippi of Waters." Hundreds of other cities that will do their part in making the valley "The work shop of the world."

It is estimated that the coal fields on "Big Sandy" would last the entire United States three centuries and here, leading to these great fields of fuel, lies this water communication offering a cheaper freight rate than ever was or ever can be offered by any other known method of transportation. Through the days of draught the steel barges are slowly accumulating at the head of the Ohio into vast fleets ready to be unloosened when a "rise" comes. With a completion of a nine foot stage of water, two great changes will occur; smaller fleet will be floated to first fit the locks and the supply will be steady. Manufacturing plants along the Ohio will not have to lay in a supply of coal at the moment when high water will allow it to be brought to them, whatever the price. Ohio costs no "Right of Way," it is kept in repair by the government. The age of the steel barge has just begun; it will last while coal remains the fuel of our manufacturies and for every barge of coal there will be another barge loaded with the manufactured product which will go to millions of homes at the same remarkably cheap freight rate. With all the wonderful trucks the war has left at the disposal of the United States and the millions spent on good roads "seems" the Ohio would be a good solution for railroad strikes.

Meeting for worship, 10:30 a. m.
Gospel service at 8:00 p. m. Sub-Christian Endeavor at 7:00 p. m.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST

The pastor's sermon last Sunday on "Christ the Lily of the Valley" was considered one of the best he has preached in Columbus. This Sunday morning his topic will be: "Christ the Rose of Sharon." It will be as fragrant and beautiful and helpful. At night the theme is: "The Joy of Life." The Lord's Supper—not the Lord's Dinner—will be observed at the evening hour and reception of new members. Dr. Robbins has many calls for sermons in other places. Another miracle of healing in answer to prayer last week. If any sick reading this notice think themselves incurable, come to this church and have the Great Physician make you well. He can do it.

Baptists do not believe in talking about church organic union and will never unite with other denominations. The denomination which has spoken most published most concerning Union is the first to withdraw from the Inter-Church Movement.

G. R. ROBBINS.

MY AUTO, 'TIS OF THEE

My auto, 'tis of thee,
Short road to poverty,
Of thee I chant.

I blew a pile of dough,
On thee three years ago.
Now you refuse to go,
Or won't or can't.

Through towns and countryside,
You were my joy and pride,
A happy day.

I loved the gaudy hue,
Nice white tires new.
But you're down and out for true.
In every way.

To thee, old rattle-box,
Came many bumps and knocks,
For thee I grieve.

Badly the top is torn,
Frayed are the seats and worn.
The whooping cough affects thy horn.
I do believe.

Thy perfume swells the breeze,
While good folks choke and wheeze,
As we pass by.

I paid for thee a price,
'Twould buy a mansion twice,
Now everybody's yelling "ice,"
I wonder why?

Thy motor has the grippe.
The spark plug has the pip,
And woe is thine.

I, too, have suffered chills,
Fatigue and kindred ills,
Endeavoring to pay my bills,
Since thou wert mine.

Gone is my bank roll now,
No more 'twould choke the cow,
As once before.

Yet, if I had the mon, so help me, John—amen.
I'd buy a car again,
And speed some more.

A STRAP HANGER.

A LEAP YEAR EPISODE

By WILL T. AMES

(Copyright, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Battersby, broke, disappointed and in a deuce of a pickle, turned away from the chill negation of general delivery window A to D and almost bumped into Louise Trask. There was not one among the hundreds of thousands of persons in the roaring town whom Battersby would not rather have met. That was because he had been steadily, consistently, loyally in love with her for eight years—and because of his present plight.

In sheer panic Battersby stood stock still, involuntarily holding his breath, hoping that the girl would not see him. Of course, she did.

"Len! What in the world—! Away over here on the other side of the country! Why, I—we weren't even sure that you were back!" Miss Trask, ignoring the press of traffic in the big post office lobby, was plainly determined to make this meeting everything that Battersby dreaded. "Why don't you say something? Why don't you act surprised to see me? Aren't you glad, Len?"

If there is one good thing that the war taught to more men than it did any other it is to despise a lie. Battersby had served in a regiment where a liar was the only mucker. He grew very red, but he looked Louise Trask in the eye and told the truth.

"No, Lou, I'm not surprised, and I'm not glad."

"Leonard!" There was genuine pain in the girl's one word. But Battersby stubbornly stuck to his unwelcome job.

"I'm not surprised, because I saw you a week ago, going into the MacLarin, and found out that you were staying there with your father. And I'm not glad, because I hoped I shouldn't see you again till things were very different with me from what they are."

"You have a very peculiar idea of an American girl's point of view, Leonard Battersby," responded Miss Trask, with considerable spirit. "One would think you had just come from France to America for the first time, instead of being a native!"

Battersby laughed shortly. "On the contrary, it is the European viewpoint of such things that has disgusted me. The frank fortune hunting by men over there, with the women a secondary consideration, is the one thing I couldn't stand. It clinched my determination to keep out of your life until—or unless—I could make money enough to justify me in seeking you out again; money enough, I mean, for justification from the doughboy's point of view."

The girl bit her lips. "And I suppose you expect that I am going to act the part of a pawn in your game of stiff-necked pride!" she exclaimed. "Do you think I have none of my own, and that I shall always be waiting when you have made the ridiculous fortune you are trying to conjure out of the air—and never will?"

"I have no right to hope so," said Battersby. "I have never asked it, you know."

"No—but I did wait. Now"—there was a trace of tears in her voice—"I shall have to do so no more. Now that I have learned, by accident, that you returned safely from the war; and are as stubborn and as—selfish—as ever, we will make this goodby." She gave him her hand for an instant, and was gone.

Late that afternoon arrived the letter Battersby had been so anxiously awaiting. It came in the nick of time, for tomorrow he had determined to take a job as a railroad brakeman, the best he could get though he had been a captain of engineers. Williamson sent him a certified check for preliminary expenses and promised to come West himself in two weeks. A year from that day the All Sea Lumber and Navigation company was a going concern with vast stretches of timber and facing the Pacific mills, ships and a great distributing depot on the Atlantic seaboard, all made possible by the vision and engineering acumen of Leonard Battersby and the faith of the millionaire who had been his colonel "over there."

As Battersby, on a flying visit to the eastern depot, was passing through the big offices he stopped stock still, his eyes riveted on the figure of a girl typist, bent over her work. Battersby rubbed his eyes, came nearer, made sure that he was right.

"Louise!"

Miss Louise Trask, daughter of a man who had habitually made while he slept the daily income of a hundred stenographers, raised a radiant countenance from her machine. "How do you do, Captain Battersby?" she said, easily as if the meeting was logical and natural as their first one, now so long ago, at the junior prom.

It was not until he had the story of John Trask's physical and financial collapse from the great adventurer's daughter, that Battersby fully realized how completely out of the world he had lived for the past year, out there in the timberlands and on the waterpowers, among the shipyards and on railroad trains, how utterly absorbed he had been in carving a place for himself in the realm of big business. To learn that Louise, the unattainable whom his pride and poverty had denied to him and for whom, after all, every atom of his great effort was being made—that by a quirk of fortune she had been suddenly landed on a plane that rendered all this hurly-burly and fortune-striving unnecessary, it came to Battersby as a shock.

But he was glad he had succeeded, glad that he could give her something of the ease and luxury she had always known. It was the third and last evening of his stay in the East that he told her so. And no shadow of doubt as to her feeling toward him troubled his soul. They had always understood each other perfectly.

"But you forget, Leonard," said the girl, "that when you were poor and I was rich you stood upon the ground that that very condition rendered our marriage impossible. Now the conditions are reversed. Have you forgotten that this is the year 1920—and that the number is divisible by four? I claim your manly prerogative."

"I'm afraid I don't understand."

"I claim the right that you claimed to withold happiness from us both. This year it is I who must take the initiative if it is to be taken. And I refuse to take it."

"Don't Louise—don't make a jest of this great, wonderful thing."

"I am not joking. I, too, have a bit of pride, Leonard. I can see the problem in no other way."

It was a fortnight afterward that Louise Trask received a letter from Battersby consisting of a single sentence: "I am coming for you on the first day of January, 1921."

And after the girl had read the letter she smiled quietly and kissed it.

SNAPPY HEADS

By R. RAY BAKER

(©, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Women want to vote like men, but they don't make good at men's trades," yawned Alex Winton, as he watched Dixie Lowell pick a piece of type from the case and place it in the "stick" upside down.

Dixie, perched on a high stool, bit her lip and adjusted the letter correctly.

"Men are so egotistical," she returned, somewhat sharply. "And how about the women in war work?"

Alex sharpened a pencil.

"Oh, they were all right as elevator girls and theater ushers and the like," he admitted, replacing the pencil behind his ear. "Don't misunderstand me. I'm not saying women lack intelligence, but I do contend that they seldom succeed in men's work where skill is required."

The scene was the composing room of the Elkton Observer, the paper "Published Weekly; Editor, Samuel Phelps; Assistant Editor, Alex Winton; Terms, $1 Per Year in Advance; Advertising Rates on Application."

Dixie was collector for Berkwith's department store, and her duties frequently took her past the Observer office. Occasionally she stopped to see Alex and to try her hand at setting type. She was engaged to Alex, and they were to be married when he "got large."

"Typesetting is so fascinating," she had just remarked. "I wonder if I could learn and work at it?"

Upon which he made the remark set down as the opening sentence of this story.

"Well, I must go," she said presently, having distributed the type

"Why Don't You Try It in a Big City?"

she had set up. "By the way, Alex, you've been in the newspaper business some time, why don't you try it in a big city?"

"Perhaps I will," he told her, and there was a hint of swaggering as he walked toward the editorial room. "I could make good, all right."

She opened the door.

"Anyhow," she said as a parting shot, "women have the determination that wins. They got the vote; just remember that."

"Alex has his share of egotism," she murmured, as she went up the street. "Still, I can't help caring a lot for the dear boy."

"Whenever you 'get there' I'm ready to become Mrs. Winton," she told Alex by way of reassurance. "I just feel that I ought to try the big city. My Aunt Margaret lives there, you know, and she's been wanting me to come for some time. You'd better think it over and try your hand on the big dailies."

A year passed. Dixie and Alex corresponded regularly. Dixie had a job and was enjoying her work, she told him. "Better come on down and get into the big game," she urged in every letter.

At the end of the year Alex decided she had the right idea.

"I can make good on any of the papers," he assured himself. "This small town training is the best thing possible. I ought to be able to hold any job."

So Alex followed Dixie to the big city. He could not see that she was changed a bit, but her temerity in trying to make a place for herself in the city had made him more in love with her than ever. He felt ashamed of himself for not leaving Elkton sooner.

"Where are you working, Dixie?" he inquired the first night he called on her at her aunt's home. "Got a job collecting?"

She smiled and countered:

"What would you expect a woman to do—without a trade? I was a collector in Elkton, so what would I be likely to do here?"

Alex found a room and started out to make the rounds of newspaper offices. There were only three, one morning and two evening, for strictly speaking it was not a large city. It was large only from an Elkton viewpoint.

At the first place he called—the Evening Journal—he was given the position of sporting editor for a trial. Newspaper men were scarce, and five years of experience was deemed sufficient to warrant trying Alex out. He neglected to tell where he had the experience, simply stating that he had "handled sports." As a matter of fact, he had handled everything from weddings and killings to editorials and personals—everything except telegraph, of which there was none on the Observer.

That night he told Dixie that he was to start work in the morning on the Journal.

"Fine!" she said. "You'll make good, too, Alex; and then—"

"And then—" he echoed, and he dreamed all night about Dixie.

The job did not prove so easy as Alex had expected. The Elkton Observer and the Journal had radically different ideas as to how "copy" should be handled. The Observer's headlines were much like labels, while the Journal's had to contain verbs and be "snappy." However, Alex did his best and refrained from telling his coworkers "We do it this way in Elkton."

When the last edition went to press Alex congratulated himself that he had done a fair day's work. His hopes fell when he looked at the sporting page, for the headlines bore faint resemblance to the ones he had puzzled over. However, he kept his own counsel.

The next day the managing editor paid him a compliment.

"Nice snappy heads," he said. "That's the way we like them."

The work came a little easier, but again when the last edition appeared Alex could not account for the strange lack of resemblance between the heads he had written and the ones that appeared over his "stuff." He wondered who had made the changes, and knew it could not have been the managing editor because the latter had commended him on his way of doing things.

Yes, Alex found big city newspaper work far different from the Elkton variety, but he stuck to it. Three days after he started to work he discovered a headline in the paper just as he had written it, and his delight was equal to that of a cub reporter who discovers one of his stories on the front page.

Be it said to his credit that Alex made a clean breast of the matter to Dixie.

"I thought it would be easy," he said, "but it's hard. I'm a rank failure as a sporting editor. My heads are all changed and I've got to admit they're improved—by somebody. I'm not making good, Dixie, but I'm going to stick to it until I do 'get there,' unless I'm fired."

Alex steadily improved during the next two weeks, although most of the headlines on his page were not the product of his mind. The managing editor commended him several times for the appearance of the sporting section, and at times Alex felt like confessing that it was not his "fault." However, he wanted a chance to deserve the praise and he felt that a little more experience would equip him.

One day one of the proofreaders came and questioned him about a headline.

"There's too many letters in the second line and it won't fit," said the proofreader. "Please substitute a word."

By chance Alex thought of a shorter word that was a good synonym and the difficulty was surmounted. As the proofreader started away he turned back and said:

"By the way, a lot of your heads have been changed by the head setter. They didn't follow copy, but they made sense, so I let them go. Is that all right?"

Alex assured him that it was. Following the clue he went out into the composing room for the purpose of thanking his unknown assistant. He was directed to a linotype machine.

"There's the head machine," said the composing foreman.

Alex went around the high counter which is called the "bank" and found a linotyper singing a "ingle-jingle" refrain.

The operator, sensing his presence, turned with a hand on the elevator handle, and looked up at him.

The operator was Dixie Lowell.

ILL REWARD FOR GOOD DEED

Surely Woman Had Good Cause to Complain of Companion's Base Ingratitude.

A senator at a banquet was talking about ingratitude—a failing of which politics affords many flagrant examples.

"That piece of ingratitude was the worst!" he said. "It reminds me of a happening at Coney Island.

"A man and woman were walking on the Coney Island boardwalk in animated conversation. But this conversation grew more and more animated. It rose to shouts on the man's part and shrieks on the woman's. Then the man up with his fist and knocked the woman down.

"She took the blow calmly enough, but as she rose she was heard to say in rather bitter accents:

"'Ah, Joe, if I'd knowed this was a-comin' I'd never have hocked me white-topped shoes to give ye a holiday down to the shore.'"

When War Ceases.

The day when Great Britain became legally at peace with Germany was Jan. 10, 1920, but the legal "termination of the present war" will not be until peace has been signed and ratified with the other enemy states.

Ugly Charmers.

Is masculine beauty or the lack of it a factor of any weight whatsoever in the influence which a man may exert upon the heart of a woman? We are in the habit of thinking so, and can cite as illustrations a few famous instances of notably handsome men who seemed to draw the hearts of women as the sun affects the flowers—says Lord Byron—but history also affords many examples to offset these. Not only plain, but actually hideous men have been famous Don Juans and "lady killers," easily outstripping handsome noble and wealthy rivals.

Pineapple Salad.—Mix pineapple, diced, with equal parts of diced celery and half the quantity of blanched and shredded almonds. Serve in nests of head lettuce with mayonnaise dressing served in the shell of a small pineapple, garnished with perfect leaves taken from the top.

Cheese Balls.—Take Neufchatel or any cream cheese, add cream, chopped chives and blanched almonds with a little chopped pepper. Make into small balls, arrange on lettuce and serve with boiled dressing or mayonnaise.

Berkshire Salad.—Mix two cupfuls of cold diced potatoes with one cupful of peach meats cut in bits. Marinate with French dressing and serve in a mound of watercress and garnish with halves of pecans—

Serve overlapping slices of tomato and cucumber, sprinkled with chopped onion. Serve with French dressing.

The Rome of old with its wealth and wine
Was the handiwork of a sturdy race:
They builded well and they made it fine.
And they dreamed of it as their children's place.
They thought the joys they had won to give
And that seemed so certain and fixed and sure
To the end of time in the world would live
And the Rome they'd fashioned would long endure.

They passed to their children the hoarded gold,
Their marble halls and their fertile fields:
But not the spirit of Rome of old,
Nor the Roman courage that never yields.
They left them the wealth that their hands had won,
But they failed to leave them a purpose true
They left them, thinking life's work all done,
And Rome went down and was lost to view.
—Edgar Guest.

As the uncouth oyster that lies beneath the deep Within its rough and homely shell a precious pearl may keep,
As gems of precious ore and veins of purest gold
May lie beneath the surface of a naked, bloomless mold—
So God oft hides a heart with the noblest traits endowed
In one to whom he hath no outward grace allowed.
—James Gardner.

Creme de Marrons.—Take half a pound of large chestnuts, cut a cross on each, and boil them in plenty of water till the outer and inner skins can be easily removed. Then pound them in a mortar, and pass through a fine sieve into a dish, adding a few drops of milk to soften the mixture. Next, beat the yolks of three eggs with one-half cupful of cream and the same of milk; sweeten with one-quarter of a cupful of sugar, add a few drops of vanilla and strain the mixture into a double boiler. Stir the mixture over the fire until it thickens, then add a little less than half an ounce of gelatin, which has been soaked in a little cold water and dissolved over the heat. Pour this custard gradually onto the chestnut puree, mixing well, then pour into a hollow mold. When ready to serve unmold and fill the center with a half-cupful of whipped cream colored with a bit of pink sugar.

Calf's-Foot Broth.—Cut up two calf's feet and put them into a saucepan with two quarts of water, a carrot, a few pieces of celery or leaves, salt and mace to season. Simmer for three hours slowly until half of the liquor is cooked away; strain and add more seasoning if needed.

Barley Water.—Take four tablespoonfuls of pearl barley, well washed, add three cupfuls of water, boil for 25 minutes; sweeten and flavor to taste.

Oatmeal Gruel.—Take four tablespoonfuls of oatmeal mixed with half a cupful of water, cold. Put a pint of water in a saucepan with a pinch of salt. When boiling stir in the oatmeal; boil slowly for 20 minutes, strain and serve.

Men's dress shirts, $1.10, Sellers.

Velvet Sherbet.—Mix the juice of three lemons, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar and stir until dissolved; add four cupfuls of rich milk and freeze. It may look curdled, but when frozen it will be as smooth as velvet.

Stuffed Egg Salad.—Cut hard cooked eggs in halves, take out the yolks, cut a thin slice from each rounded white to make it stand firmly, drop in each a little mayonnaise. Mix the yolks to a paste with the mayonnaise, using any minced meat fish or flavor vegetable for seasoning. Fill the cavities and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

The children of America are farmed out to the public school teachers for the training of mind and morals, and to the Sunday School teacher for training in spiritual things. The latter has, on the average, about fifteen minutes to attend to the most important education of children, and that once a week. Then we wonder why the children are lost to the church.

The Glenwood Sunday School will hold an all day picnic in Glenwood Park on Thursday, June 24. Everyone is invited to attend, bringing a basket lunch and spending the entire day with their friends.

The Baraca Class of the Sunday School has promised to furnish lemonde for the picknickers and will be on hand to serve them. It is planned to conduct a series of games and contests for both young and old so that none will suffer from lack of amusement.

Let's all put away that date before we forget it and allow neither business nor pleasure to interfere with our attending.

This is a dark deep secret but we'll let you in on it just this once. It is rumored that Mr. Prior and Mr. Vanmeter are planning some special stunt for the occasion. Maybe it will be a parade with a brass band, who knows?

Franklin T. Wells, commercial teacher, 146 Eldon Avenue, who has been teaching in the Benton, Illinois, High Schools the past nine months, returned to his home last week for the summer vacation. He will return to Benton for the term 1920-21 having been re-elected last April at a liberal increase in salary. M. W. Seiller, of Seiller Bros. has just returned from the Ladies' Ready-to-Wear Market.

High Cost of Street Improvement

The same class of street improvement which cost about three dollars per front foot a few years ago, would cost at least ten dollars per foot. This fact was demonstrated last week when Service Director Duffy received bids for the construction of two streets on the Hilltop. The lowest bid was ten dollars per front foot, or $400 for a forty foot lot.

Heed & Holton have several lots north of Broad street on Harris, Ogden, Warren and Burgess avenues. With all improvements in and paid for, which can actually be bought for but little more than the present cost of improvements. Some of them can be sold as low as $400. These very low prices are possible only because the improvements were installed just before the war, when both material and labor were very low.

If you are interested in securing some of these homesites it would be advisable to call Heed & Holton by phone at once.

Mrs. D. Helfenstien of Midland Ave., is home from a visit with relatives in Jackson, Ohio.

CHILDREN EAGER FOR VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS

The two daily Vacation Bible Schools which will be held on the Hilltop during July and August are becoming the topic of conversation among the children. They are inquiring when will the school begin? Who can come? What will do do?

The schools begin July 6th.

One school is to be held at Glenwood M. E. church especial for children of the lower part of the Hilltop; and one school to be held jointly by the Hillcrest Baptist church and Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church in the Hoge Memorial church building with teachers from both churches and a full program of work. Both schools will have well-trained teachers.

A kindergarten will be held at each church for children from 3 to 7 years with a regularly trained kindergartner in charge. The program for them will include Bible stories.

Children from 3 to 14 years of age both boys and girls, are invited to attend these schools. Handwork, manual training, songs, stories fresh from the Bible and play will make up the program with picnics parties, etc. interspersed.

Children are invited to enroll as soon as possible and to invite all the children of the Hilltop. These schools are for all children, whether members of any particular Sunday School or not. Parents teach your children the Bible while they are young. Children come and enjoy the summer!

Emy Lou White Slippers for Girls, $2.00. Chas. Houx Shoe Store.

Members of the Nazarene church gave a miscellaneous shower honoring Mr. and Mrs. John Wagner, a newly married couple, at the home of Mrs. Cantanese, 496 W. Cherry St.

The guest list numbered over 20 persons, who spent an enjoyable and interesting evening. Refreshments of muffins, strawberries and cream were served.

REALLY WORTHY OF RECORD

If Anyone Doubts That Ostrich Is a Remarkable Bird This Story Should Convince Him.

"Doubtless," said the professor to the returned traveler, "you have picked up many strange bits of information regarding the animals and birds of the countries you have visited?"

"A few," answered the traveler. "The most interesting thing I ever heard, however, was a story I got in Africa. It seems that a year or so ago a representative of a rubber-stamp house went through there and lost his sample case, containing all kinds of office stamping apparatus. It appears that some ostriches found the case, broke it open and swallowed the samples."

"I see nothing odd about that. Ostriches will eat anything."

"Yes, but now every ostrich egg that is found there is numbered and dated!"

Cheerful Singer.

The brown thrasher is a beautiful bird both in the coloring of his body and in his song, says the American Forestry association, Washington. On head and back the bird is of a delicate and refined reddish brown, and below white with black spots. But it is his song that is particularly pleasing and musical. Unlike some other birds, he does not seem to care whether he is being watched or not as he sits on the topmost branch of a tree in the meadow and pours forth his energetic and fervent song, which sounds as if he were telling the farmer to "Hurry up, hurry up; plow it, plow it; harrow it, harrow it; hoe it, hoe it;" and so on through a list of similar happy instructions.

I wish to express my heartfelt thanks to my neighbors and friends for their kindness and sympathy during the sickness and death of my mother. I also wish to thank them for the beautiful floral offering. Also to thank the little children for their untiring efforts gathering flowers, which were so kindly received.
Margaret B. Cummins.

The St. Paul's United Evangelical Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society held their regular monthly business meeting, Tuesday evening, June 8, at the home of Mr. George Melvin, S. Warren Avenue. At this meeting election of officers was held. Following the dismissal of the business meeting, games were carried on and dainty refreshments were served.

TELL 'EM NOTHING

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(©, 1926, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"A bit of advice to you, George, old man!" cried Bill Edwards, waving his napkin to attract attention, "and it's summed up in these words: 'Catch 'em young' (which you did); 'treat 'em rough, and tell 'em nothing!'"

"Hear! hear!" cried the crowd gathered in the dining room of the Westlock Lawn club to bid George Evans goodby as a bachelor and godspeed as a benedict.

Bayley Robinson watched the proceedings with amused eyes. His turn at this sort of thing would arrive presently, for his wedding day and Janey's was set a brief six months away. Consequently he wasn't averse to gathering any random scraps of advice and stowing them away for future use. This little catch-phrase doggerel he had just heard for instance. Spoken in jest, would it bear serious consideration?

"Catch 'em young." Janey was just past twenty, young enough certainly for these days when many a girl managed to reap in a college course and a career before marrying.

"Treat 'em rough"—well, hardly, considering his six-foot-one and Janey's scarce five-foot-five.

"Tell 'em nothing." There, now might be a point. For Janey was the most inquisitive little soul on the face of the earth. "Where did you eat lunch today, Bayley?" "What made you ten minutes late, dear?" "What are you thinking about—business or me?" That was Janey Middleton.

And the question was, would it wear off with married life, being merely a sentimental interest in him and his doings altogether commendable or would he, hereafter, be accountable to that slip of femininity for every thought of his brain, every moment of his time? Bayley decided then and there to start right with Janey. So many marriages were wrecked nowadays because of a failure to take a firm stand at the beginning, he told himself. The thing to do was not so to merge one's own individuality with that of the loved one as to lose it entirely, but, while becoming theoretically one whole, to remain actually two halves.

As a result of this decision, Bayley determined on a course of action which, carried to a conclusion, might ultimately have changed his wedding day from a thing of orange blossoms, church music and solemn promises into simply, "the day on which I was to have married Janey."

As it was—well, it began with a telegram. Bayley was the eastern representative of a tremendously big concern dealing exclusively in women's high grade tailormades, to speak in terms of the "trade." The telegram announced the intended visit of a buyer from one of the most exclusive shops in New England's largest city, a visit which would probably culminate in an order mounting well into the thousands.

Bayley knew this buyer—had known her for years—knew her for a capable, intelligent woman about ten years his senior, with a mind single to business. Now had it not been for Bill Edwards' silly doggerel, Bayley would have explained all this to Janey, and all would presumably have been well. But it unhappily occurred to Bayley that here was an excellent opportunity for beginning that policy of telling Janey nothing. Janey would never know and would be spared any slight feeling of jealousy at her Bayley ordering "grilled lobster for two" when somebody else than she was the other one of the two.

So, in the due course of events, Miss Dobson and Bayley had their luncheon. Bayley's firm received a $4,000 order, out of which Bayley pulled a nice little commission, and that evening Bayley presented himself, as he always did on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday nights, at the Middleton apartment.

While waiting some few minutes for Janey Bayley's thoughts dwelt complacently on his commission, which would go to swell that particular fund labeled "wedding trip expenses," and on his wisdom in sparing Janey the details of his business.

Then in came Janey, softly, alluringly gowned in old rose taffeta with quaint draperies which emphasized her slenderness. If her wistful gray eyes were a bit teary rather than laughing Bayley didn't observe it, being much more concerned over the dexterity with which she evaded his eager arms and customary kiss and slipped over to a prim, straight-backed chair instead of sinking down into the blue velour depths of the other corner of the davenport on which he himself had been sitting.

"I say, Janey dear!" he said, disturbed, "nothing's wrong?"

"Oh, no!" returned Janey, with a promptness and sweetness of emphasis which would have warned a more experienced man. Then, "Where were you around two o'clock, Bayley?" she asked—quite casually.

"Me? Oh, I was out."

"Alone?"

"No-o— that is, you see, an out-of-town buyer happened in. And you know how it is, I've explained, dear, that when people come on, it's often up to me to put them in a pleasant state of mind, and eating is always a sociable way of spending the time, and so——"

"What buyer was in?"

Janey's artless questions couldn't have been more involving if she had deliberately planned them for his undoing.

"Dobson," he said, desperately, "Dobson, of Boston."

"M-m-m," said Janey. "Miss or Mrs?"

It was no use. "How the deuce—" he began.

"Oh, Bayley!" wailed Janey. "Why didn't you tell me? It's not the thing itself but the concealment that I mind! You see, father said I could have the car downtown this afternoon, and I waited until I was sure you had returned from lunch. Then I telephoned to see if I could bring you home at five. The stenographer said you had gone out at one, saying you wouldn't be back until three.

"So I brought dad home instead, and he said he had seen you hurrying along as if to keep an appointment. And when I reached home Bill Edwards' sister was here and said she sat three tables behind you at Dantini's and wondered if the sporty looking girl you were with, with a carmel coat and a large bouquet of double violets, was your sister. And if I could only have explained! It put me in such a false position and—what's the matter?"

For Bayley was regarding her, not with guilt or contrition, but with open-eyed admiration.

"'Tell 'em nothing!'" he murmured. "Good Lord, you don't have to! They find out without being told!"

Then, some inward recollection of the foolish doggerel which had been his undoing, recalled the words, "Treat 'em rough." Rising, he strode over to the girl futilely dabbing her eyes with her handkerchief, and took her in his arms.

"Janey, my darling, I won't even apologize. It isn't worth it, but I do promise hereafter to tell you every single thing every single time. Now lift up your lips and kiss me!"

As Janey meekly did.

THE GIRL IN THE PICTURE

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

John Corbin, his hands in his pockets, sauntered aimlessly down Medford's one main street, alive for a few brief hours with the pleasure seeking Saturday night crowd. Two years ago tonight he had been one of them, one of the happy-go-lucky content to enjoy the present. But tonight his thoughts were occupied with the past alone. And the past for John spelled Julia Standish—slim, brown-eyed Julia Standish, a girl well worth doing one's utmost to win.

And he had been so sure of winning! Julia had almost said the little word "yes," when suddenly she had become infatuated, obsessed with the idea that her place in life was not destined to be the presiding genius of a man's humble home, but the admired favorite of moving picture audiences. "Plague take the moving pictures!" had cursed John unreasonably ever since. Nor had he once in the days that followed ever patronized that popular amusement which he blamed for coming between him and the fulfillment of his dreams.

Tonight her words rang as insistently in his ears as they had the moment she uttered them. "No, John, I cannot marry anybody yet. I must try my luck. Perhaps, some day, I may change my mind—when I have made good!" And her eyes shone with the hope that thrilled her.

But John, bruised and hurt, had thrust aside the implied suggestion rudely. "Your success, Julia, will never bring me to your feet. Abandon this crazy scheme and become my wife, or else you go your way and I mine—lonely as I know my way will be," he concluded bitterly.

Julia, her pretty head for once completely turned, had gone her way—gone somewhere where gifted as pirants for the cinematograph were trained and starred and paid fabulous salaries and featured in Sunday supplements with chic French maids and tiny Pekinese—at least, he hoped it was to be that way with Julia. If he couldn't have her for his own, he still did not wish her unhappiness.

Wrapped in meditation over what might have been, John found himself brought up short before a lurid advertising board of the Medford Rialto—a brightly lighted little theater attracting the crowd. For a second, his eyes took in the cheap advertisement uninterested. Then the huge letters of the name of the actress portrayed startled him from his musings—Gloria Blaine! Gloria!

Why, Gloria had been the name that Julia had hinted she would like to adopt for hers. She was sick of old plain "Julia!" But the carmine-faced woman pictured beneath in motley raiment bore no likeness to his delicate featured girl.

Strangely drawn by the subtle influence of the name, John took his stand at the end of the waiting queue before the ticket office. And, presently, a dingy bit of pasteboard admitted him to the gloomy depths within.

A farce, broad in its humor, was being projected on the screen. Then followed instructive travelogues and amusing animated cartoons, through which John sat, mildly entertained. At length, lavishly featured, was introduced the big picture, "The Ultimate Cost."

Curious, in spite of himself, John scanned the picture of the cast. When the close-up of the star was thrown, he sat back in his chair at ease. That was not his Julia, even though he fancied he could trace a slight resemblance. Two years will not change the shape of one's nose or lengthen an upper lip.

Relieved, John found himself watching a group of people waiting the announcement of dinner and discussing some apparently well-known scandal when the entrance of the footman, announcing new arrivals—and presently the appearance in the doorway of a woman in evening gown, pearls gleaming on her neck—John gripped the arms of his chair with whitened fingers. He leaned forward, his expression intense. That woman must be Gloria Blaine. But it was not—it was emphatically not. That woman was Julia, Julia Standish.

Through the long nerve-wearing play, John forced himself to sit—from the disagreeable scene where Gloria flirted shamelessly with the villain, through to the bitter denouement—the whole of it a tawdry play. If he winced when the villain's arms held the girl he had hoped to hold some day, he made no outward sign. After all, it wasn't real. Yet the thought of the rehearsals—"You utter idiot," he addressed himself, "to even think of such things when you gave up the girl forever."

Julia had grown beautiful, and yet—was it fancy that painted tired lines in her face that no amount of make-up would eradicate? Was it fancy that gave a decided thinness to the figure which not so very long ago had been delicately supple, hinting at the richer fullness to come? What sort of success had the years brought Julia—all she had hoped for? Evidently, for she was quite apparently the star she had planned to be.

The thought of her possessed him during the long sleepless hours of the night which followed. And the dawn brought a sudden, wild resolution. He would take a long postponed vacation from business, seek out the studio which released the picture he had seen, and hunt up Julia—or Gloria Blaine now. Not that he intended to renew his suit. Far from it. He wanted no spoiled actress for a wife.

During the tedious transcontinental journey the man alternately blessed and cursed his impulsive folly. And when he found himself a quite superfluous figure among the chattering, gum-chewing crowd of girls, the regular, "hangers-on," waiting for a chance to "supe" at three dollars a day, he berated himself still more.

Yet he had found Julia. His card, sent in by a phlegmatic office boy, had brought him the information that she was there and that she would see him presently.

Slowly the door opened. Was that Julia? It certainly was not Gloria Blaine—that weary-eyed girl in the plain gown and drab little hat.

"John!" she cried. "John!" With a motion of her hand, she beckoned him to a little anteroom beyond the range of curious eyes.

"But, Julia, aren't you the magnificent Gloria Blaine?" John, not satisfied to be holding two slim white hands, was bent on plumbing the mystery.

"No," said Julia, shaking her head. "No, I'm not that Gloria. For a while I used that name instead of Julia, and I think that was what really caught the attention of the real Gloria's manager. I became her understudy and once, when she was taken sick, played most of her scenes in 'The Ultimate Cost.' We make up somewhat alike. But in spite of that I failed to make good and have never been given another chance."

"Well," said John, who was happier than he had been for many a day "would you take a chance of another kind—as—as my wife?"

Julia's eyes filled. "John, dear, after making you lose the years of happiness which would have been ours, is it possible that you still love me?"

"Why," said John tenderly, "having lost so much time already, isn't that a good reason for wasting no more?"

And Julia, unresisting as his strong arms drew her close, evidently agreed. "I'm glad you came," she said, then added vehemently, "I never want to hear the name of Gloria again. Forever after, I'm just plain Julia!"

"Not plain!" whispered John, tipping back the tired face made beautiful by love.

Take a filet of beef, trim it neatly and lay in a deep dish with an onion cut in slices, two bay leaves, a sprig of parsley, whole pepper and salt and olive oil to baste it well. Let the filet lie in this marinade for six hours, turning occasionally, then roast in a hot oven; let it be rather underdone. Serve surrounded by macaroni cooked as follows: Put into a saucepan a half-cupful of tomato puree, three tablespoonfuls of butter and two or three tablespoonfuls of the meat gravy; season well with pepper and salt to taste. Bring to the boiling point and simmer for a few minutes, then add, a little at a time, some previously-cooked macaroni. Toss all gently and mix in at the last, three teaspoonfuls of Parmesan cheese.

Spinach With Cream.—Wash three pounds of spinach and put it in a large saucepan; cook over the heat, stirring occasionally 12 minutes, then put through a fine sieve, saving all the liquor; add four tablespoonfuls of butter and pepper and salt to taste; cook slowly for 15 minutes, then add three tablespoonfuls of cream; mix well and pile in the center of a dish with fried croutons surrounding the spinach.

Turn About's Fair Play

He kept us out of war
And he kept us out of peace.
He kept us out of Mexico
And mixed us up in Greece.
He kept us out of sugar
And he kept us out of shoes;
He joined the League of Nations
And ask us to pay his dues.
He kept us out of everything
And you bet that we'll remember
And do a little "keeping out"
Ourselves 'bout next November.

WAYS OF CLEANING MARBLE

Grease Spots May Be Removed Completely If the Following Directions Are Observed.

The following methods of removing grease spots from marble are from recipes published in Popular Mechanics Magazine. If the spots are fresh rub them with a cloth that has been dipped in pulverized China clay, repeating several times, then brush with soap and water. If the spots are old brush energetically with distilled water and the finest French plaster, then bleach with chloride of lime on a white cloth. If the piece of marble is small enough, soak it for a few hours in refined benzine.

Another method is as follows: Saturate fuller's earth with equal parts of soap liniment, ammonia and water, apply to the grease spot and press with a hot smoothing iron. Renew the solution as it evaporates. When wiped off dry the stain will almost have disappeared. A few days later when more oil will have worked its way to the surface, repeat the treatment. A few repetitions will suffice.

Lemon Cups or Sauces.—When making lemonade save the best skins by putting them at once into cold water. They will keep for several days. These lemon cups are nice to use for salad dressings with lettuce or cocktail sauce with oysters or Hollandaise sauce with fish.

AMIR MADE HIS OWN RULES

Probably Other Golf Players Have Wished They Might Exercise Like Kingly Prerogative.

Habibullah Kahn, amir of Afghanistan, became a golf enthusiast and during the year 1910, and for three years, played the game almost daily. He had links built at both Kabul and Jellalabad. He lost a ball one day in the neighborhood of some store sheds that had recently been erected for storing electrical machinery that was arriving. He sent some companies of soldiers and had all the machinery removed and the go-downs torn down that same day. He told me once that whereas the year before he only played four holes at golf in a day, he now played as many as six. He often drove off and then rode to the ball in his rickshaw.

Once, A. C. Jewett writes in Asia, when he was playing against his eldest son, Prince Ingyatullah, his majesty's ball lodged behind a bunch of camel grass. He asked the Scotch engineer, who was acting as instructor and coach, what the rules were, and whether the ball could be moved out from behind the grass. When told that the rules prohibited this, he asked if the rules could not be changed; and told that this might be done, said: "We will make it a rule that when a ball falls behind a bunch of camel grass it can be moved out." A little later the prince's ball lodged behind a bunch of camel grass, and the amir, noting it, said: "We will change the ruling; the ball cannot be moved."

There is little of the true sporting instinct in Afghan. They will lie and cheat, anything to win, and are very poor losers. The amir generally won. I do not believe any one ever dared to beat him except the prince.

TURKS ARE READING BIBLE

Demand in Constantinople Said to Greatly Exceed That of Any Year on Record.

Turks are buying the Christian Bible, according to a letter from Constantinople received by the American Bible society, says the New York Evening Post. Disturbed conditions during the last year made Bible printing impossible at the Constantinople Bible house, a branch of the American Bible society, but 24,286 volumes of Holy Scriptures were circulated. W. W. Peet, Levant agency secretary for the American Bible society, with headquarters at the Bible house in Constantinople, writes: "We have before us what will prove, I think, to be an unprecedented demand for Scriptures for the coming year. There are indications from all sides that the demand for Scriptures will be large, and this in all the language used here. Probably Greek and Armenian will lead, though the demand for Scriptures in the Turkish language will doubtless exceed that of any previous year. We are doing all we can to get ready."

Take half-inch slices of brown bread, the kind that has been steamed in one-pound baking powder cans, fry in a little bacon fat until hot, then serve with a poached egg on each.

Bread Pudding.—Butter both sides of three slices of bread, add one quart of milk, two-thirds of a cupful of molasses and a little salt. Bake slowly about two hours and a half, stirring often during the first half hour of cooking. Serve with cream.

Browned Oatmeal.—Cut cold oatmeal into slices, dip in egg that has been thinned with four tablespoonfuls of milk. Heat bacon fat and carefully brown on both sides.

Rice With Bananas.—Peel and scrape three well-ripened bananas and mash them with a fork to a smooth creamy pulp. Add a few drops of lemon juice. Stir this lightly into one cupful of cold cooked rice and serve with sweetened cream. If bananas seem green wrap them carefully in paper and place in a box of excelsior in a dry warm place.

Rice Omelette.—To one cupful of rice add two tablespoonfuls of milk and three well beaten eggs, a teaspoonful of salt, stirring them lightly. Melt a tablespoonful of butter in a smooth omelette pan and when hot pour in the omelette. As it cooks lift it from the sides to let the uncooked part run under. When all is creamy spread with four tablespoonfuls of currant jelly and fold. Serve hot on a hot platter.

Sponge Cake Porcupines.—Cut squares or rounds of sponge cake. Place in a pudding dish, moisten with orange or any canned fruit juice. Blanch almonds and press into the cake leaving the sharp ends up. Cover with a soft custard and bake until the almonds are brown and the custard set.

Father dear father come home with me now,
For ma has some carpet to beat;
She's got all the furniture out in the yard
From the front door clear to the street.

Foods which must be denied children should not be placed tempting before them—a strong reason for having the children eat alone. Their food should be palatable and attractively served. Table manners may be learned very early which will never have to be relearned.

Currants and raisins may be cleaned by rubbing them with flour, then shake it off to remove all dust.

To get the flavor of orange for tea, sauce or for any other dish, rub a cube of sugar over the rind to absorb the essential oil.

CANDIDATE FOR WARD COMMITTEEMAN

Henry K. Wirtz is a candidate for member of the County Central Committee (Ward Committeeman) for the 11th Ward, to be voted for at the primary on August 10.

Mr. Wirtz has been active as a Republican worker in the Ward for many years and for the past seven years has been the Ward assessor. He is secretary of the 11th Ward Republican Club, a member of the Buckeye Republican Club and various civic associations and always works for every movement for the betterment of the West side.

William B. Cady of 48 Clarendon avenue, was delightfully surprised last Tuesday evening, the occasion being his 17th birthday. The B. Y. P. U. of Hill Crest Baptist Church, of which William is president, descended upon him in a body, and presented him with a fine fountain pen and other gifts in appreciation of their love and esteem. During the evening dainty refreshments were served to the following guests:

Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Cowley, the Misses Ardis and Ruth Hensel, Mildred Skoates, Marian Long, Verna Peake, Ellen Withroe, Virgie Spangler, Dick Slagle and Mary Bostic, Messrs. Roy Hawthorne, Girdon Magrage, Myles Robinson, Paul Stanley, Saul Wharton, Ernest Cady and William Cady.

The evening was spent in games and music, the guests departing at a late hour, wishing the host many more happy birthdays.

Dr. G. R. Robbins, wife and daughter last week sold their recently purchased home on Midland avenue and a few days after bought the spacious and beautiful home with adjoining lot of S. W. Six, our worthy Hilltop citizen, and will move into same the last day of June. The house is considered by experts one of the best built houses in Columbus, the best material being used within and without. This will be an ideal house for the Robbins and Geiger School of Music which will become another asset to the value and attractiveness of the Hilltop.

The Elite Club entertained with a spread Thursday evening, June 10, at the home of Mrs. Hondashelt. The spread was a complete surprise to Mrs. Hondashelt, the club having planned it in honor of her birthday. The ladies all had well filled baskets filled with numerous good things to eat, as the men will all testify. These members were present: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wilkins, Mr. and Mrs. George Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Spangler, sons Bobby and Dick, and Mr. and Mrs. Houdashelt and son Kenneth. Everybody reported a glorious good time.

All Hilltop children are invited to the two Daily Vavation Bible Schools beginning Tuesday, June 6th. Good Bible stories told in a non-sectarian way by trained teachers; good songs memorized; health and habit talks; a kindergarten for the children between the ages of 3 and 7 years; sewing, raffia work, weaving, crocheting, etc., for younger and older girls in the schools; woodwork, kite-making, manual training and weaving for the younger and older boys in the schools. Ball games, picnics, swimming, playground, and kindergarten parties for all children at some time during the summer with teachers always in charge. Stereopticon pictures shown each week, only the best of pictures!

A nominal fee covering less than the expenses of each school will be charged as follows: $2.00 for the first child in the family and $1.00 for each additional child up to $5.00 which is the maximum charge for the summer.

Remember these things—Both schools open Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock, July 6th. The fee of $2.00 must be paid on the opening day, except where a family sends more than one child in which case half of the total amount is due the first day and the balance the first day of the fourth week.

Where the Schools will be—One School will be held at the Glenwood M. E. Church. The Hillcrest Baptist Church and Hoge Memorial Church will conduct one together to be known as the Community Daily Vacation Bible School to be held in the Hoge Memorial Church Building, while the stereopticon pictures will be shown in the Hillcrest Baptist Church Building on certain days.

A husking bee, a barn raising, a bob sled party. Even those exciting events would be tame in comparison with the big Sunday School picnic that is coming for people of Glenwood.

On Thursday, June 24th, Glenwood Park will be turned over to the Sunday School for their holiday. It will be an all day affair with a big basket dinner at noon, with everything imaginable to eat. The Baraca Class has promised to furnish lemonade and will be there to see that everyone gets all they want. In the afternoon there is planned a full program of races and games, enough going on all the time to keep everybody happy. None can afford to miss this one big event of the year.

THE ROBBINS AND GREISER SCHOOL OF MUSIC
89 Midland Avenue

Started with a good enrollment and will continue receiving a limited number of pupils in piano, violin and elocution for the short summer term. Ten lessons for eight dollars. Press notices in different cities where they have been given recitals and concerts are manifold. We attach only two.

Miss Edith Louise Robbins, Reader, has won highest praise from critical audiences in musical centers of this country and Canada. She has the remarkable record of pleasing every audience.

Miss Robbins has a stage presence that is natural and unaffected, which immediately wins the interest and attention of the people. Her voice is melodious and resonant, responding easily and flexibly to the various emotions she portrays in her readings.

With a repertoire of more than 200 selections, thus combining pathos and humor, the program is diversified and never becomes monotonous.

Miss Ethel Greiser, Pianist, is a talented and gifted artist of unusual magnetism. She has studied under the renowned Frederick J. Hoffman, a pupil and an exponent of Leschetizky, instructor to Paderewski and Mark Hambourg.

Miss Greiser has that fine musical perception that adds to the brilliancy of technique, the beautiful power of pleasing interpretation. She is also a splendid accompanist.

Six men from the Hilltop, last Saturday night
Went out to Big Darby, where "fishies" do bite (?)
To tell who they were—that's sure our intention,
And the luck they had—we also will mention.
First was Sulzberger, the jeweler, we mean,
Who furnished the "juice" the oil and machine.
Then comes Geo. Steward—the man 'fraid of dogs
And Dr. Fox, with his "forceps" and togs
While Messrs. Schoonover, Neff and Arden
Brought hooks and corks and worms from the garden.
All went "galorious" till—well, so they say,
The roads went "crazy"—the bunch lost their way.
Oh, horrors! out there in thick darkness of night;
With thoughts of back home—a terrible plight."
"Say, George, go knock at that farm door for help."
"Not I," says George, as some dog gave a yelp
And he cuddled way down secure in his place
Objecting to look any dog in the face.
They finally reached the banks of the brook
When each one got busy with pole and hook.
George S. took a seat way up on a hill
Where the dogs couldn't catch him—there he sat still.
With string hanging long from the pole to the hook
Which was buried deep in the depths of the brook.
Doc Fox got a bite—he thought was a bass
And went through the motions of giving it "gas."
But Sulzberger, optometrist, captured the prize—
Was bitten by a "snake" that had "goggle-eyes."
While Schoonover, Arden and Neff had the string,
The poles, the hooks, and everything,
Their catch was the same as the rest of the bunch
The only good "bites" they had was the lunch.
After catching every craw-dad there was in the creek
And feelings were tired and sleepy and weak
They all jumped into the car with a will Started "her" up and broke for the "Hill."

Children's Day at Glenwood church, was a delightful occasion, not only for the little tots, but for everyone present. The Altr was a fairy bower of beauty, the fragrance of June roses filling the church. The artistic arrangement of the great profusion of flowers did credit to the committee. They excelled themselves.

There was neither "hitch" or "brake" in the whole program, everyone from the little three-year-old, to the young lady who whistled so charmingly, acting well their part. We would like to mention names, and hand out some "bouquets" to the "trainers," but fearing we might miss some, we throw an armful of our best, in your direction and call and catch.

The pageant "God's Flower Land," was a real treat and greatly appreciated by the immense audience. We doubt if any divine, however long the list of D. D., and L. L. D.'s attached to his name could have brought nature's God so close to all hearts until his attributes of Hope, Truth, Love and Joy gripped the soul as did the scenes enacted so beautifully by the young people.

The Summer scene carried us back, to a hill farm in southern Ohio—a mother's garden of herbs and flowers and our fruitless chase after the brilliant, many-hued butterflies. We recalled our childish disappointment, when with our fingers on the tips of their wings they would skilfully elude our grasp and flit to another flower, just out of our reach.

The little girl butterflies, in their sheen, many-colored costumes and graceful motion was a pleasing picture. As the last song "Hosanna" was being sung, a canary broke forth in such glad peals of joy and praise that it almost seemed like a voice from the choir of heaven.

Truly Children's Day of 1920 was a glad day at Glenwood.

Pistons Act Also as Valves.

An internal combustion engine, which outwardly differs little from the familiar automobile type, but which is peculiar for its lack of either poppet or sleeve valves, has been developed, says the May Popular Mechanics Magazine in an illustrated article. The pistons are made very long, with the combustion chamber recessed in the head, and the lower end works through a ring with external teeth, which engage a worm wheel on a shaft in the casing. The gear rings run on steel balls in oil, and the piston actuates the connecting rod through a ball joint.

A TIP FROM THE WAITRESS

By HAYDEN J. PRICE

© 1929, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Jimmy Dale and Elsie Thompson were among the thousands of young people whose betrothal was hastened by the departure of the young man in the case for France.

They had become engaged in May of 1918, two weeks before Jimmy left to take out a year's membership in the A. E. F. In fact, it was June, 1919, when Jimmy got out of the army and rediscovered the function of taste as a means of enjoying one's meals. It was July when he went back to the office.

Elsie also worked in an office in New York. But Elsie was essentially a home-builder; hers was the domestic temperament. Of course, she believed in suffrage, and was eager for the vote, but temperamentally she was not suited for forum or soapbox—really the same thing. She looked forward to building a home. As she commuted from Long Island her ride home at evening was spent in anticipating the day when she'd be able to say to herself as she rode to work: "The last day of this."

But Elsie and Jimmy, like thousands of other young couples throughout the land, had to face the inevitable economic readjustment following the war. When Jimmy had gone into service he had been only a year out of college, and as he had begun at the bottom with a large corporation, his salary was such that he was not rated high in Bradstreet's. The year and more that he spent in the army hadn't exactly helped matters in this regard, either. Jimmy's pay in France had gone to buy omelets in order to supplement the mess hall fare.

When he got back to civil life Jimmy went back to the corporation. His salary was higher, but it was still far from impressive. So Jimmy and Elsie found themselves in a rather complex psychological situation. They had been engaged nearly two years, and Jimmy's salary was not enough for two to live on even if they bought their clothes at sales and had eggs but once a week.

There comes, in the psychological development of love, a tide in the affairs of men (and women) which must be taken at its flood in order to avoid a reaction and stalemate; a time, when progressive action must be taken in order to avoid retrogression. Such a time had come in the love of Jimmy and Elsie. With the glorious courage of youth they decided to marry. Elsie's decision to continue at work made this possible. Jimmy realized what it meant for Elsie to postpone that anticipated exclamation, "the last day of this."

"What is it—is it for Me?"

The young lovers met at noon every day and had lunch together at a moderate priced little restaurant conveniently close to their respective offices. They took the same table daily and daily they left the same modest ten-cent tip. Across from them a gruff but prosperous man sat daily. He could afford a more pretentious restaurant, but patronized the Mayflower because of its convenience to his brokerage office. His gruffness was in sharp contrast to the pleasant attitude of Jimmy and Elsie, and no one realized this more than the waitress. Knowing from the snatches of conversation that the young lovers were none too prosperous, and also that the long-delayed marriage was at last to take place about four months hence, the waitress, an incurable romantic, resented the gruff old man's prosperity. If she had had the power she would have transferred his prosperity to the young lovers.

Now the waitress knew that every penny counted with them. Her sympathetic interest in their romance led to a curious reaction against the gruff man who sat opposite. She decided to save each day the quarter tip the gruff Mr. Barker left her and also save the ten-cent tip that Jimmy left. Twenty-five cents from Mr. Barker was no pinch at all. Jimmy and Elsie, by comparison of incomes, were far more generous, she figured. Mary Hogan then decided to save Jimmy's dime and Mr. Barker's quarter each day until the end of June.

The months went by, as months invariably do. The end of June was only a week away and Jimmy and Elsie became more engrossed in each other every day. Mary Hogan felt justified in catching a phrase of their conversation now and then, for she wanted to know just what day the wedding was going to take place. She eventually heard the date. It was to be June 18—a week away. That night, in her little room, Mary Hogan counted the silver in a little metal box. Jimmy's dimes for 100 days and Mr. Barker's quarters for 90 days came to the neat sum of $32.50. Mary smiled to herself in anticipation of the surprise that she would see on the faces of the young pair.

On June 27, two days before the big event, Mary took the little metal box to the restaurant with her. When Jimmy and Elsie came in they greeted her more pleasantly than ever. When Mr. Barker came in he was gruffer than ever. Mary herself was almost happier than ever. Jimmy and Elsie finished their lunch sooner than Mr. Barker.

Just as Jimmy reached for his straw hat Mary placed the little box in front of him.

"Open it," she said to Jimmy.

"What is it—is it for me?" asked Jimmy, puzzled.

A PAIR OF SHOES

By LINCOLN ROTHBLUM

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Dolly Copley, just twenty and pretty as a waxen doll, breezed into her home, closely followed by the protesting and admiring Jim Reardon. Dolly's mother, her gray hairs belying the youth and laughter in her eyes, glanced up from the bit of embroidery in her hands and noted a foreboding pout on her daughter's face, wondering as her gaze wandered to the flushed countenance of her future son-in-law. Mrs. Copley did not like the looks of the situation.

"Children, what is the matter now?" the "now" indicating that similar incidents had occurred before. Accustomed as Mrs. Copley had become to the petty quarrels of the young lovers, any new cause of disagreement evoked uneasiness lest in their childish tempers they invited much unhappiness.

"Well, who said what?" she added by way of an initial conciliatory step.

"Oh, Jim's trying to act silly," said Dolly.

"You mean, Dolly won't be sensible," corrected Jim.

"First one and then the other," patiently chided Mrs. Copley, laying aside her embroidery. "Now, Dolly we'll hear from you, and," anticipating a long recital, "be brief."

Dolly, with cheeks prettily flushed removed a large leghorn hat, its creamy whiteness enhanced by a blood-red poppy stitched to its side. She seated herself on a low bench before an open grate fire and placed the hat upon knees cocked up boy fashion.

"Really, mother," came the answer in tones of insulted dignity, "it is well I find it all out now. Jim wants a slave, not a wife." This with a withering glance at her prospective master, or husband, who sat twiddling the cigarette his impatience would not permit him to smoke.

"Careful, Dolly, careful," cautioned Mrs. Copley, but Dolly pretended not to hear.

"The play at the theater tonight was all about that man who wanted his sweetheart to repeat the silly words, 'Thank goodness, the table is set,' and she wouldn't do it (which I am convinced was perfectly proper). So she gave him back his ring. And that's just what I'm going to do because Jim thought he could make me say, 'Here, dear, are your shoes.'"

Jim's Shoes in Her Hand.

"I didn't say that," retorted Jim defensively, "I said—"

"Just a moment, please," pleaded Mrs. Copley, placatingly. "Are you through with your side of the story, Dolly?" A blond head nodded in the affirmative. "All right, then, we'll hear what you have to say," continued the arbitrator, turning to Jim.

"Aw, after the show all I said was if I should ask her to bring me my shoes, if she would hand them to me kindly or would she be stubborn like the girl in the play. And Dolly said, 'Oh, I might and I mightn't.' I didn't like that very well, and I said, 'Dolly, let me hear you say, 'Here, dear, are your shoes.'"

Then Dolly said, "Don't be silly, Jim." And I said, "Please, Dolly, say, 'Here, dear, are your shoes.' Well, the long and short of it is, Dolly won't say it, and I want her to say it."

And having delivered himself of this oration, Jim Reardon set his arms akimbo, spread out his legs and defied the world.

"No more of this nonsense, children," Mrs. Copley rebuked sharply. "Come, now, shake hands and drop the matter."

"But she hasn't said, 'Here, dear are your shoes,'" came parrot-fashion and with masculine persistency from Jim.

"The which I won't say," snapped Dolly dangerously.

And the astonished eyes of Mrs. Copley saw the flash of a diamond as it whirled through the air and lay in scintillating beauty between the angry pair. In high-heeled disdain Jim swarmed from the house. And Dolly cried.

The night lengthened into a week and the week into a month, and the month into double and treble that number of days. And time, proverbial healer of discord and inharmony, rendered impossible a concession of pride from either side. Dolly's interest in life ceased to center about gowns, teas and shows, and dwindled to reading the daily news with its disquieting announcements.

It was well into the fourth month since the unfortunate attendance at that performance, whose very moral, intended for them, failed to drive home the lesson. Jim Reardon moped down the town's busy street, dark shadows beneath listless eyes testifying to the gnawing canker of heartsickness within.

For distraction he joined the onlookers before a shop window where an up-to-date business-getter had stationed his machine to secure the passing trade. "Rubber heels put on while U wait," read the legend in brilliantly silvered letters across the pane. The advertising psychology of the repairman was good. Jim glanced at his shoes, thought of rubber-heeled comfort and saw the excellent work being performed within the shop. He entered.

"Rubber heels, please," he courteously said to the gum-chewing clerk as he removed and handed him his shoes. He inserted his feet and twiddled his stockinged toes within the spacious confines of carpet slippers, as vacantly he watched the minute hand of the clock on the wall make monotonous progress. The whirr of the electric machinery was peculiarly soothing to his distraught mood.

A boy entered, and not receiving the immediate attention the majesty of his youth demanded, flopped a coin on the counter and, grabbing up a pair of shoes, made hasty exit just as the clerk advanced.

Jim took out his watch and confirmed the time of the wall clock. He had been there 30 minutes. He called to the clerk.

"Will you please see if my shoes are ready? I am anxious to get away."

The gum-chewing clerk glanced over the repaired work on hand and puzzled, walked over to the cobbler and inspected the work yet to be performed.

"Can't seem to find your shoes," was the laconic information. "Do you think that kid took 'em?"

Jim tried to look as dignified as his carpeted feet would permit. "Pray how will it help me to know that?" came the acid rejoinder.

The ironic sarcasm was wasted. "Mebbe he'll come back." Jim fretted and fumed and waited—ten minutes, 20 minutes, another half hour. The embarrassing suspense was terrible. His collar wilted beneath the strain. If he could only arise and pace the floor. But one cannot pace the floor in carpet slippers. They simply will not stay on.

And then there blew into the shop a hurricane of tempestuous indignation, brandishing Jim's shoes in her hand—Dolly's hand. "What do you mean by sending me a pair of man's shoes?" she cried, advancing like a tumult of avenging wrath.

And then she saw Jim. With shoes in hand, she involuntarily made a step toward him. Jim shuffled to his feet. Four months of separation were nothing. They were together now!

"I've been a brute," Jim contritely apologized. The clerk giggled as he looked from Jim's feet to the shoes dangling from the girl's wrist by knotted shoe strings. "Don't ever say it, Dolly, don't ever say it."

But the "it" Dolly would say. Handing him his property, there came in gentle monotone, "Here, dear, are your shoes."

Eggs Stuffed With Anchovies.—Cook as many eggs as needed until well done. Remove from the shells and cut in halves lengthwise. Take out the yolks and pound them with as many skinned and boned anchovies, adding butter, nutmeg, pepper and salt to taste. Fill each half egg with the mixture, put them in the oven to heat very hot and serve on oval pieces of bread which have been fried in butter.

Rice With Cinnamon.—Cook two-thirds of a cup of rice with a pint of boiling water until the water is absorbed, then add a little at a time a pint and a half of milk, let the rice cook slowly for four hours or until quite tender. Add powdered sugar to taste and when well dissolved set away to cool. When cool add a cupful of whipped cream, mix and sift cinnamon over the top, put on ice until wanted.

"It's," said Mary, with a trace of brogue "it's for both of you. Open it." Jimmy lifted the lid. In the box he and Elsie saw dimes and quarters, several half dollars of them.

"What on earth is this?" asked Jimmy.

"Read the paper and see," answered Mary.

There was a little folded piece of paper on top of the coins. Jimmy opened the note and read:

"Dear Jimmy and Elsie: I knew back in February that you were going to be married in June. And it takes money to be married. So I've saved all the dimes you left me as tips and all the quarters that old grouch across the way left me. He only left tips so he'd get quicker service, anyway.

"In this box are the dimes and quarters—$32.50. I want to give them to you both as a little wedding gift in return for the nice way you speak to me when you come in every day. Good luck to you both—and my blessing. Very sincerely, MARY HOGAN."

Jimmy and Elsie could hardly speak their gratitude, but each managed to mutter something. As the three of them stood there the gruff Mr. Barker looked at them with beetled brows as though resenting their joy. With a final handshake Jimmy and Elsie said good-by to Mary for a week. Mary made it very clear that only the presence of the other lunchers prevented her from kissing them both. As she looked after the happy lovers she said, quietly, to herself:

"For there's nothing half so sweet in life,
As love's young dream."

"What's that?" said the gruff Mr Barker.

"I was asking you if you cared for any dessert today," replied Mary.

"No—none today," barked Mr Barker.

Mary smiled. She was keenly enjoying Mr. Barker's ignorance of the fact that all his quarters since the middle of February—$32.50 of them—had just been carried out by Jimmy Dale.

When Jimmy got back to the office he had a chance to count the money. He discovered an error in Mary's accounting, for instead of $32.50 the sum was $35. He had ten minutes left of his lunch hour, and he hurried over to the Mayflower. Mary was wiping off the marble top of a table when Jimmy spied her.

"Miss Hogan, there was $35 in that box instead of $32.50."

"Sure I know it," said Mary, smiling. "The extra $2.50 is a little something from me. It'll buy something—if only a bit of lingerie for your bride to be."

"By George, you're a brick," said Jimmy.

"No," answered Mary Hogan. "No,

WASPS FAILED AT THE END

Naturalist's Tests of Intelligence of the Little Insects Wound Up in Disaster.

Ants, mice, beetles and other members of the animal world are often credited, and justly so, with abnormal intelligence. A scientist has declared he once cultivated intelligence in a worm, but it is doubtful whether any one but a mathematician could fully appreciate the truly wonderful feats of the wasp world.

Mason wasps are magnificent engineers. They plan tunnels on up-to-date, mathematical lines and contrive wonderful erections for their people at home.

A great naturalist recently made an interesting experiment with a colleo tion of mason wasps under his observation. London Answers states. He placed an ordinary bell-shaped glass over one of their elaborately designed burrows, confident that the creatures would ultimately work their way in from the earth outside. Sure enough, in due course, an outer circle of subterranean passages, linked up the inner lines of communication, and soon the wasps were to be seen hard at work underneath their glass house.

There is an unhappy sequel to this tale. The naturalist, anxious to test their power of intelligence, closed the outer entrance to the main burrow, and awaited for the wasps to work their way out, but he was doomed to disappointment. The creatures, unused, apparently, to any innovation in their scheme of things, never even attempted to work their way out, as they had so effectively worked their way in, and finally perished miserably in their glass tomb.

Stuffed Tomatoes.—Cut off the tops and hollow out the insides of nice even sized tomatoes. Fill with the tomato mixed with chopped celery and onion and any desired dressing. Stone some olives and fill them with anchovy butter made by pounding a few anchovies and mix with equal parts of butter. Put one olive in the center of each tomato, sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve.

Sandwich Filling.—A delicious filling for sandwiches is cream cheese and chopped maraschino cherries, adding in a bit of the cordial from the bottle to moisten the cheese.

BYRON EXTOLLED IN PRESS

Two Tributes to the Memory of the Greast Poet Have Been Paid for Many Years.

This is the anniversary of the death of Byron, observes the New York Evening Sun of April 19. If the reader were in London today and should visit the statue of the famous poet in that secluded and exclusive part of Hyde Park called Hamilton gardens, he would find the monument decorated with a single yellow wreath. And if he had brought with him a copy of the Times and would turn to the obituary column he would find there a notice of Byron's death and a proclamation of his fame.

These two tributes have been rendered annually to the memory of Byron for many years. They are paid for each year with the income of a sum bequeathed for that purpose by a woman admirer of the poet. The legend connected with the tributes runs that they are to be continued annually until the name of Byron is inscribed in the poets' corner of Westminster abbey. Byron died in Greece on April 19, 1824, in his thirty-seventh year.

All in the Wedding Cake.

The ring in the wedding cake means that the person who draws the piece containing it will be the first to be wed of those present. The thimble brings disappointment, an old maid's fate is wished onto the finger of the one who gets the thimble; the tiny wish bone, of silver or gold or whatever it may be, another popular ingredient in wedding cakes, allows the one who draws it to make a wish upon it which will come true. Then there is the penny or dime promising riches to its lucky finder. The button foretelling bachelorhood for the one whose plate it falls upon.
